SOLEMN SCENES.

The Last Obsequies of Col. Watson B. Smith.

Heaven Mingles Her Tears With Those of a Sorrowing State, And Softens the Light Which Sees the Grave Close Over the Martyr.

His Associates of the Army and the Bar Join With the Family and Friends, And Pay Their Last Tributes of Love and Respect.

The Citizens Take Active Measures to Secure the Assassins.

The Inclement and Threatening Weather No Obstacle to a Large Attendance.

The Public Determined to Avenge the Horrible Deed.

Although no important development throwing light on the terrible tragedy of Saturday morning, were made on Sunday, the agitation in regard thereto was in no respect diminished but seemed rather to become more widespread. It was the topic uppermost in every mind and theories were as numerous as the sand upon the seashore, almost every one having revolved the matter thoroughly in their mind and having a scheme for the capture of the assassin or assassins. Sunday morning Dr. Chambers, the veterinary surgeon, who was engaged professionally in the postoffice block, happened into an old stable in the rear of the United States building, and there discovered a suit of clothes which had apparently been used as a disguise, and doffed so hastily as to be torn. He summoned Officer Ed. Gorman to the spot, and the latter took possession of the suit. It consisted of a light, tight-fitting gingham jacket, or "jumper," a hickory shirt inside the jacket and a pair of plaid pants. They were torn as if they had been ripped from the person of the wearer and were marked by spots resembling blood. They are now in charge of one of the detectives and may prove most important in the future progress of the investigation. SILENT REMORSE. The talk of "accidental death" and "self destruction" was revived to some extent on Sunday and Monday morning and strange to say many choose to believe in it. There is one fact to be explained before either can be seriously considered. There is no question as to the traces left about the northwest window of the postoffice, which was found open before daybreak. This window is on the first floor back. It was closed Friday evening early, was seen open by Signal Officer Day at 10:15 o'clock, and the heel-marks on the stone and the muddy footprints were examined carefully by half a dozen, including a Bee reporter. This indicates the presence of an intruder in the building at an untoward hour, and with the other circumstances surrounding the case and the known character of the deceased, precludes all idea of suicide. The other proposition is an improbable one. A DISCREPANCY exists in the statements of several witnesses as to the hour within which the shots must have been fired. Mr. Day testified to seeing a man at work in the clerk's office at 10:15, when the door was open and a light burning within. Had the murder occurred while he was out he must have seen the murdered man by the gas light. It is improbable that he was asleep short of half an hour and yet three witnesses say they heard the shot at 10:15 o'clock. A fourth, who was not on the stand, heard the shot distinctly and says it was at five minutes to 11 o'clock. It only goes to show that in reality very little or nothing is known to any one about it. THE DAY OF TEARS. THE DAY OF BURIAL dawned with a cloudy sky and a steady fall of warm rain, which soon made the streets almost impassable and the outlook generally disagreeable, the rain increasing as the day advanced. Sunday was so bright and beautiful that preparations had been made everywhere for sending delegations to the funeral obsequies at 2 p. m. yesterday. Had there been no change it would have resulted in the largest turnout of citizens and visitors ever seen at a funeral in this city. Even under the disadvantages of inclement weather, the attendance, as will be seen elsewhere was very large. THE BAR MEETING. The adjourned meeting of the Douglas county bar association met at the court room at 9:30 a. m., and was called to order by Judge Wakeley, who called upon the chairman of the committee, on resolutions, Col. C. Chase, Capt. Wood and Col. Vandervoort, who in words of sad welcome offered them the hospitality of the city. The G. A. R., and Bar Headquarters were established in Col. Vandervoort's office and the judge's chamber. There were also representatives of the bar from Ashland and elsewhere on the line of the B. & M. All these visitors will return at 6 o'clock this evening in the special car in which they came. At the federal court room the delegation was formerly received by Col. Chase, Capt. Wood and Col. Vandervoort, who in words of sad welcome offered them the hospitality of the city. The G. A. R., and Bar Headquarters were established in Col. Vandervoort's office and the judge's chamber. BEGINNING OF THE END. At 1:30 p. m. the Omaha and Lincoln bar, the federal officers and the members of Farragut post No. 25, G. A. R., marched from the United States court room to the church, escorted by the members of G. A. Custer post No. 7, G. A. R., of this city under the command of C. H. Fitch. The auditorium was already nearly filled, but seats were reserved for the bar and posts in front of the pulpit. At 2 o'clock the vast room was filled to overflowing, and still the crowd that had been wending its way thither for an hour did not grow perceptibly less. The scene at this time was most impressive. The decorations were of the most elaborate character. The pulpit, walls and gallery were hung with sombre drapery, which fell in heavy folds from above the south window to the rear of the altar. In the center of the society was a large picture of Col. Smith, which had been placed in the center of the front morning device made by Windheim & Co. on the occasion of the Garfield obsequies, the inscriptions remaining unaltered. The floral tributes were profuse and perfect in their beauty and harmony with the surroundings. Two huge vases upon either side were filled with delicate white flowers and immortelles. A floral pillow of great beauty was marked in the name of the deceased "E. B. S." (First Baptist Sunday School), above that of flowers and evergreens was inscribed, "We mourn our teacher." This was from the infant class, which was in the personal charge of the deceased. A floral harp was also among the other elaborate tributes. Above the entrance door beneath the gallery, were the mottoes, "Well done good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," and "His work is well done. Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

UPON THE STAGE were the most prominent men in the state. Upon the right sat the members of the Lincoln bar, and upon the left the Omaha bar, with directly in front seated the pastors of the city, the Omaha Glee Club, and Mrs. McGranahan presiding at the organ. Among the prominent visitors from abroad were Messrs. Whittle and McGranahan and Hon. John B. Finch. In the front seats were the members of the Lincoln Post G. A. R., on the right, and of G. A. Custer Post No. 7 on the left. With the latter was the Nebraska Association of Michigan Soldiers and Sailors. The purple and white silk banner of the G. A. R., the blue silk banner of the Michigan soldiers, and the various standards of the national colors were all decorated with the emblems of sorrow. The congregation numbered many hundreds and the majority were ladies who braved the storm and mud to pay the last tribute of respect to the memory of the martyred advocate of temperance and champion of law and order. THE APPROACH OF THE PROCESSION. Shortly after half-past 2 the solemn strains of the organ announced the approach of the funeral procession, which entered the west door of the audience chamber as the vast congregation rose to their feet. The remains, inclosed in a handsome mahogany casket, were borne up the aisle by the following pall-bearers: W. T. Seaman, E. P. Vining, J. C. Denise, O. F. Davis, C. F. Manderson and O. P. Wood and placed in front of the pulpit. The casket was covered with a wreath of exquisite floral emblems, noticeable among which was a beautiful harp of tube roses and a wreath of small and calla lilies. The audience having been seated the choir composed of the members of the Omaha Glee Club assisted by a member of prominent society of the city under the direction of Frank S. Smith sang with deep feeling and expression the chant, "How blest the righteous when he dies." Selections were then read by the Rev. J. W. Harris, pastor of the Baptist church from the Twenty-third psalm and relations, after which a Christian gentleman, referring to the fact that never in the history of Omaha had the city been so profoundly moved. Mr. Sherrill said that the great assemblage before him was something more than a tribute of sympathy, it was a tribute to the character of a man who for many years had lived and moved in the community and who by his manliness, moral courage and purity of character had won an honored name in our city. "Let it be remembered for his city," said Mr. Sherrill, "what they do respect—no wealth, position, popularity, but character." The speaker then alluded to the great interest taken by Colonel Smith in young men, and his unwearying efforts to assist them in need and misfortune. He alluded to the constant growth of his character in wisdom and knowledge, and concluded by a touching tribute to the sweetness of his disposition and the nobility of his Christian life. A short address was then made by Mr. P. C. Himebaugh on behalf of the Young Men's Christian Association, of which organization Colonel Smith was the first president. He was followed by United States District Attorney Lambertson, who spoke of the deceased in his official capacity as clerk of the United States circuit court. Mr. Lambertson opened by saying that if Judge Dundy could have trusted himself to speak on the occasion he would out of the fullness of his heart have glad testimony to his high regard for Col. Smith as an officer and as a man, and his great love for him as a friend and brother, but that the sad calamity had so prostrated him that he was forced to delegate the duty to another. As an officer Col. Smith was affable, patient, incessant in toil, courteous and strictly honest. As a federal official his name was honored and his honor was ever found on his hands. As a citizen he was public spirited, generous to a fault, and bold to express his honest sentiments. He believed in law and social order. He was reason to suspect that he had fallen a martyr to his principles. There was no answer to the arguments which he used except the assassin's blow. Mr. Lambertson paid a high tribute to the countless home life of Col. Smith, which he held as pure as the flowers which lie upon his bier. GENERAL MANDERSON, on behalf of the Grand Army of the Republic, was the next speaker. He said that the distinguishing characteristic of Col. Smith was devotion to duty. It was this which prompted him to enlist as a private at the outbreak of the war, and it was this that made him the excellent soldier that he was. His service, extending throughout the entire war, was principally upon the staff, where he brought to the duties of the office the same clear head, clear-sighted order in business that were characteristic of him in civil life. From the organization of the Grand Army he was an active member, ever true to its principles of fraternity, charity and loyalty. No call ever made upon him for relief for a needy comrade or the widow and orphan ever went unheeded. His loyalty to duty extended beyond the war and prompted him to face other and greater dangers. General Manderson concluded his speech as follows: "Our comrade is dead. Never on this side of the grave hereafter will we look into his kindly eye, never again will we feel the warm grasp of that generous hand, but 'O the deep damnation of his taking off.' I feel as you all feel, two contending forces struggling within me—grief at his loss and indignation at his cruel death. When yesterday one who was nearest and dearest to our comrade lay in the agony of her dreadful grief, she exclaimed, 'O that dark hall! O that dark hall!' Our comrade has passed through that dark hall. He has entered into the light of a blessed immortality. He has come unto the peace that passes understanding." As a personal friend of Col. Smith and his eloquent remarks were made by the Rev. W. J. Harshbarger followed by a tender address by his fellow worker in the Baptist church, Dr. O. S. Wood. Dr. Wood's voice trembled with feeling and he was several times compelled to compose his emotions. He was followed by the Rev. J. H. Harris. Mr. Harris alluded to the strong attachment which existed between himself and Col. Smith as pastor and friend. He spoke of his thoughtfulfulness, his Christian meekness and humility and his earnest endeavors for the financial and spiritual interests of the church. He said that the temperance organizations of Omaha had and related an incident showing how Col. Smith took upon himself the burden which the speaker said cost him his life. Meeting a lady prominent in temperance work, Col. Smith said to her: "I never see but that I think I ought to do some work for temperance." He was answered that if some of the men of the city would take hold and assist, something might be accomplished. To this Col. Smith answered, "I will assist you." He did, said the speaker and he did I speak with an uncertain sound and I mean that I saw that man died a martyr in the cause of temperance and I would it were proclaimed in every hamlet throughout Nebraska." The choir then sang "Asleep in Jesus, Blessed Sleep" after which an opportunity was afforded the audience to view the remains, which was taken advantage of by nearly all present. The body lay in a natural position, one hand across the breast and an expression of PEACEFUL CALM upon the countenance. There were few traces of the dreadful deed which had robbed the city of one of its most honored citizens and carried sorrow to the hearts of a stricken family. There were few dry eyes in the sad procession which filed slowly past the casket and cast a lingering glance upon the remains. At a quarter to five the casket was closed, the benediction pronounced and the funeral procession took up its solemn journey to the cemetery amid a drizzling rain. NOTIFICATION. THE ROSE ROBBERY. A Bold Burglary—The Plunder From Which is Found and Identified. A Bee reporter who dropped in at the city railroad office yesterday morning, found the officers engaged in overhauling a sack full of plunder, including combs, brushes, hand mirrors, morocco pocket books, etc. Mr. W. S. Rose, the claimant to the property, was also present and identified it as a portion of what was stolen from his store on Thursday night last. On that evening he had attended the Whittle and McGranahan revival meeting and returned home about 10 o'clock. He owns the little drug store on Pierce street, between 7th and 8th and before morning his place was entered by burglars, who broke through the back door, and robbed of the articles described, a small sum of money and a gold watch valued at $75. On Sunday some stone-masons saw a boy named P. Broed pulling a sack out from beneath Milton Rogers' store watch house on Jones street, and gave chase, when the boy ran and dropped a portion of his load. Officer Nightingale was summoned, and succeeded in working up the case to a point where three arrests were to be made, all boys. They were P. Broed, Peter Casey and Johnny Shannon. The last two were arrested yesterday morning, and the other lad was probably pulled last night. The plunder had been divided, and was all found by the officer, scattered in different localities. The boys claim that Broed found the sack and its contents and divided it with them, and it is not improbable that such is the case, as it does not seem likely that such small boys could commit the burglary. The watch and a portion of the goods are still missing. The whole loss is estimated by Mr. Rose at $125. The boys will be arraigned before Judge Benke to-day. Get Out Doors.
