ON THE TRAIN.

Amusing Incidents and Accidents in Railroad Life.

One of the funniest things imaginable occurred on the Northwestern west-bound train the other evening just after dark. The train, for some reason, came to a sudden halt in a long stretch of woods near Woodbine, and possibly the adjoining building 253 Ia. Sam replied, "Dunno; p'raps its rob-564 bers." The conductor saw a chance for fun and exclaimed, "This is the 719 third time this train has been robbed on this very spot."

The boys' ebony faces fairly turned white, as they heard this and saw the conductor hastily thrusting his money 898 into a convenient hiding place. Just then the train conductor opened the door and was immediately asked by the dining car conductor, as the latter gave a big wink, "What's this for? Train robbers! Whom did they hit when that shot I heard just now was fired?"

The conductor tumbled to the racket and said: "They've killed the express messenger and are coming through the cars. There they are, just out on the platform, he shouted, as somebody made a noise outside. "Look out for yourselves,"

At this every darkey mysteriously and suddenly vanished. One went through a window and the other two under tables, where they crouched trembling, and expecting the terrible robbers in upon them every moment. At this point the train started again, and the conductors laughed themselves sore; but it was some time Assessor-W. J. Mount. Justices before the scared sons of Ethiopia Gustave Anderson, J. R. A narrow escape from a disastrous fire was had Friday forenoon about 11 'clock in Saxe's drug store, at the orner of Farnam and Thirteenth streets. One of the clerks was at the rear end of the store mixing turpen-tine and other ingredients for tine liniment. The gas was lit immediately above him, and the turpentine in some way caught fire. It blazed up in an instant, and enveloped the immediate space around in dames. A pail of water was dashed on the burning fluid, which served to spread, but not entirely extinguishing it. Additional water, however, stopped it. Additional water, however, stopped the incipient conflagration before the surrounding inflammable suff caught.
