

A MODEL LETTER.

In Which the Prominent Features of a Great City are Briefly Told.

Politics and Piety, Railroads and Fine Arts, Theatres and Parks

Special Correspondence Omaha Bee. CHICAGO, November 24.—The prosperity of this great city, generally speaking, was never better than at the present time.

The real estate market is active, desirable property commands high figures, and capitalists are largely investing in it.

Work on the new cable street railway is being rapidly pushed. Large gangs of men are daily at work placing the rail and iron yokes in position.

The war in eastern passenger rates still continues, and the Vanderbilt lines, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern and Michigan Central are still "on the fight" with the Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio roads.

Chicago as an art centre is gaining a reputation that she deserves and may well be proud of.

The Reverend Doctor Thomas, who was tried and found guilty before the late Rock River Conference of preaching from a too broad and practical platform in his furtherance of Christianity, has notwithstanding the persistent persecutions of Doctor Hatfield, and other shining lights in the Methodist brotherhood, many staunch friends and admirers, and the People's church is filled on every Sunday with large congregations, drawn thither to hear the eloquent and sound discourses of this reverend gentleman.

The past week was a bright one for theatricals. The several theatres have been well patronized by the amusement-going public, and the performance as a whole have been excellent.

The Boston Ideal company are at the Grand Opera House playing a successful engagement, enacting light popular operas, the "Pirates of Penzance," and the "Masochite" among others.

The present season of navigation on the lakes will soon close. Many craft have already laid up for the winter.

Disastrous storms, for which Lake Michigan is noted, are occurring and are warnings to the cold mariners who dare face the "briny deep."

A Starvation Wager. "Of course," said the man, "I don't claim to be no Tanner. He scored forty days without grub. Now I can do half as much, if not more, for the money you can put up. I'm bust, but you'll back me and divide the winnings, I'll guarantee to starve or through or die in my tracks."

Travis finally concluded that the man was game, and thought he might be able to catch Shaughnessy or Sharp Walker on a bet.

That Maggie Sinclair was to be married soon. There had been no correspondence kept up between them, because he had thought it best not to write till he had a home and fortune to offer his wife.

Meanwhile Maggie's folks moved to Green street, near Thirtieth, and their circumstances began to improve. The two girls became prettier as the years went by, and had no lack of admirers.

"Well, can't I do half as well? I'll eat days and fast nights—only fastin' half the time. I keep my professional contracts square up, you bet yer—"

Travis knocked the man down with a claret bottle, and withdrew.—Salt Lake Tribune.
