LOCAL BREVITIES.

—Clara Louise Kellogg at the opera house to-night.

—Frank Mayo opens an engagement at the opera house to-morrow week.

—The telegraphers, after their banquet, sent the O. R. B. a fine lot of provisions.

—Several wagons broke down at the corner of 10th and Howard streets yesterday.

—Henry Volkenstein has been arrested for selling liquor without a government license.

—Hoy & Hardie's Combination present "The Child of State," at the Opera House, Dec. 1st.

—The mail service has been extended to Calvert, a new town between Central City and Nemaha City.

—Geo. Wiseman, who nearly killed Jailer Miller, has been taken to Bellevue, St. Clair county, Ill., where his relatives reside.

—Samuel M. Atz, of this city, came up from Lincoln yesterday with his wife, who has been a patient at the insane asylum there.

—Sebastian Brock, whose thrilling tale of captivity with Sitting Bull was published recently, is anxious to obtain employment in some ordinary position.

—The change of weather, which began Tuesday evening, brought a fall of rain and sleet which has left the sidewalks in a dangerously slippery condition.

—The thermometer at Max Meyer & Bros. indicated 3° above zero at 2 p. m. yesterday, 20° at 7 a. m. to-day, and 6° at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

—Where in the world does all the tea go to? Another large invoice in origin packages direct from Japan arrived today at Metzger & Bros. 1005 Farnham street.

—A Lincoln physician, who is well acquainted with Vennor, the weather prophet, says he is a fraud, and that he himself laughs at the credulity of the public in his predictions.

—The present peace and quiet of lower Douglas street is greatly improved of late, and the new drug store of Chas. Kuhlman & Co. adds greatly to the appearance of a heretofore neglected locality.

—A three-story brick block sixty by one hundred and twenty feet in size, will be erected next spring on the Tremont corner, Sixteenth and Capitol avenue, by Hon. Lorenzo Crounse.

—One of the commandments which will never be answered in this world is, to what extent the city council will be responsible in the event for the profit induced by the bad sidewalks the public suffer from?

—The secretary of the Nebraska State Medical society has issued a call for a meeting of that organization to be held in Lincoln on Tuesday, December 27th, in order to take into consideration the enforcement of the state medical law.

—The examination of witnesses in the case of Martin Kearney, charged with the burning of Boyd's packing house, resulted in the prisoner being held to bail in the sum of $1,000 for his appearance at the district court. Other arrests are expected.

—Both sides of the hydrant at the corner of Ninth and Farnham, were open for several hours yesterday, the whole vicinity was flooded with water, while the gutters ran full as after an April freshet. It will be slippery walking there when it freezes over.

—The Harmonic society is in active rehearsal of the "Bells of Corvill" with a view of surpassing the former excellent entertainment. Mr. Dexter, of St. Louis, who has kindly consented to take the character of "Jean, the Lone Fisherman," a part played by him a hundred times, or more, in eastern cities, will please our people with his fine voice and conception of the character. We bespeak for Saturday fair skies, and the opera house will be filled to overflowing. We hear of "commerce" and "lunch party," but the latest development is the "matinee party." The ladies, with their children, are forming parties, and will go to the matinee Saturday in a body. The "Populist Literary party," numbering some ninety of the first ladies and gentlemen of the city, will be the most numerous.

—The funeral of Johnny Swaney occurred Tuesday afternoon. A vast concourse of relatives and companions followed his remains to the grave. Among the mourners of the U. S. ships, where he had learned the trade and was entering upon a career of usefulness as his death was a shock almost equal to personal bereavement, and they showed their strong attachment by attending the funeral to the end. Of Johnny it can truthfully be said that he was wholly free of the vice to which so many young men of to-day are addicted. This is the second time that death has entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. Swaney. A few years ago they buried a daughter who was just entering into womanhood, and now their cup of affliction is overflowed. The sympathies of every parent will go out to them in this dark hour.

Parties leaving town or disposing of their household effects will make money by calling on A. L. Fitch & Co., 209 South 12th street, who pay the highest CASH price for second-hand furniture. a2-lm

SCANDALOUS SCENE.

A Mother and Daughter Confronted in Police Court.

Accusations Exchanged and Threats Indulged in.

As a general thing the proceedings at police court drag along rather monotonously, but once in a while there is a sensation in the court room and one of these infrequent affairs was witnessed by those in attendance yesterday. Mrs. Hill and her daughter Lizzie, who reside on Webster and 19th street, were before Judge Boncke on the charge of disturbing the peace, but after consideration Judge Boncke felt it to be his duty to discharge both with the advice to the daughter to go home with her mother and be a good girl.

The circumstances which directly led to the appearance of the parties in court, occurred about 6 o'clock Wednesday, when a crowd gathered at the McShane corner, on Cummings street, North Omaha. A reporter who hastened to the spot was told that a woman was hanging her daughter and saw the latter, a prepossessing girl of perhaps thirteen years of age, dragged by the hair of her head for nearly a block before the officers came and arrested both mother and daughter and took them before the police judge, where the former put up bail and the latter was given money by a kind-hearted officer to pay her street car fare up and back, to the residence of a friend with whom she said she could find refuge for the night. The witnesses of the affair said that the girl's offense consisted in going to the house of a neighbor where she was found and removed summarily as stated.

At the close of the examination in court Mrs. Hill turned to officer McCreary, who made the arrest and accused him of acting in a manner unbefitting an officer and promised to settle with him. He replied that if the reports of her neighbors were true she should be landed in jail for a while. A wordy encounter followed in which the woman threatened several times to "gettle with him hereafter." She then started to go, telling her daughter to "come along now," but the latter drew back and protested to the judge with tears in her eyes and terror in her voice, that she did not want to go, as she was afraid her mother would kill her. Judge Boncke told her to go with her mother and if she abused her to telephone him and he would have her arrested. The girl wept and implored not to be allowed to be taken and said her mother had choked her until she couldn't breathe for over a minute, that she had threatened to tie her up with a rope and keep her that way all night.

The bystanders in the court room all took sides during this performance and, to their credit be it said, with the girl, with a very few exceptions. The dignity of the court was disregarded and everybody talked out as they pleased. "You have disgraced me enough now," said the mother, "and as I never was disgraced before, I ought to get a rawhide and take you home with it." She also said she ought to "break the girl in two" and called on the officers to "handcuff" her and make her go. Lizzie still resisted and cried and made every plea possible to be kept away from her mother. She said the neighbors told her that they would come down and testify for her that her mother abused her.

John Thomas who rents the house to Mrs. Hill put in his car in the woman's den and he was shut up by the question as to how he was interested in the matter.

Officer Sullivan remarked that if it was his girl he would kill her. There are, of course, two sides to everything, and it is said that the girl in this case is wayward and disobedient; one person stated she was keeping bad company and liable to end up in a life of shame. She is too young yet for any such foolish idea as that but certainly if anything would save her from it, it is not cruel treatment from her mother. An officer informed that her mother would come down and testify for her that her mother abused her.

Mrs. Hill is a very pretty, lady-like looking woman, of evident refinement and does not look capable of the conduct attributed to her. Her daughter is also of comely appearance, bright and interesting, and it would be gratifying to every one to know that all misunderstandings were amicably settled. If they cannot be, the girl should be allowed to do what she pleases her willingness to do, go to the reform school for a while.

Satisfactory. Mrs. Wallace, B. H. N. Y. writes: "I have used BURDOCK'S BLOOD PURIFIER for nervous and bilious conditions, and have recommended them to my friends. I have been superior to any other medicine I have used, and can recommend them to anyone requiring a cure for biliousness." Price $1.00 a bottle. eod-lw

A DANGEROUS ASSAULT.

James Kovarik, an Employee at the Smelting Works, has His Head Cut Open.

A somewhat serious, though not a fatal affair, occurred Tuesday at 11 o'clock, at a saloon and boarding house on the corner of Thirtieth and Leavenworth streets, kept by Joe Kavan, in which it is alleged he struck a man named James Kovarik, an employee at the smelting works, with a heavy pitcher and severely injured him. Kovarik states that he was in the place with a friend, both sitting down and conversing. He states that Kavan was intoxicated and got in an altercation with somebody who was drinking at the bar. After a few angry words Kavan threw a beer glass at the man he was quarreling with. At this juncture Kovarik's friend, foreseeing a row, said to him, "Jim, we'd better get out of here."

Kovarik assented and the two started for the door. Kavan then rushed from behind the bar with a heavy beer pitcher in his hand and struck Kovarik over the head and face. This blow cut a deep gash over the left eye, nearly three inches long and clear to the skull, and badly bruised his face.

The injured man sought medical assistance early yesterday. Dr. Merriam dressed his wounds. Kovarik says that the assault was entirely unprovoked on his part, and he intends to prosecute Kavan both criminally and civilly.

SOME CONUNDRUMS.

An Old Settler Wakes Up to Business.

He Propounds a Few Pretty Sensible Questions.

It was late at night. The world, including the policemen, was generally asleep. But in the second story of a modest brick structure the gas still flared brilliantly and lit up the usual activity of the morning newspaper office. The spontaneous click, click, click of the types, as they dropped into numerous "sticks," were broken only by the profane remarks of the foreman, as he surveyed a proof abounding in "ringers," and the occasional arrival of the "devil" with fresh invoices of "copy" from the telegraph editor's room. Down in the basement the big press was rumbling and rattling with steady movement, seeming to say, "I tell you the news; I tell you the news."

But in the local editor's sanctum all was serene and that individual was calmly sucking a half-lit pipe. His page was full, his proofs were out, and he was alone—resting from a hard day's toil—a day of many miles of tramp over slippery walks, of many tiresome questions and meagre news in return. Through the Faber-pusher's mind dreams of the past were vaguely flitting, closely pursued by phantoms of present and future ambitions, while over all hovered the specter of numerous unpaid bills. It has been said that he was alone. That is only partly true. No animate object was in the editorial room and still he had a companion, one of many years' experience, and who had evidently arrived at the age of discretion. This companion was a good-natured looking skull, who had been found in days gone by in some deserted spot, and had been rescued from his resting place to be given the position of "the silent editor" upon the staff, that he might counteract the talking propensities of verbose visitors, and furnish a suggestion of mortality to the extroverted change friend. The old fellow held an honorary position, to be sure, and had never been put upon the pay roll, but he nevertheless was a fixed part of the establishment, and all attempts to supersede him by younger and more active attaches had been finally checked by an open revolt.

Gazing upon his friend's placid countenance, the reveries of the local man were drifting along unbroken, when something seemed to agitate the ancient features, and before the astonished looker-on could credit his senses, the old fellow had actually yawned two or three times, grinned wider than he could see, and solemnly winked with his left eye, his hand resting on his forehead.

"Say, young man, what are you giving us?"

"I—I—I—don't—don't know what you mean," stammered the one addressed.

"You don't know?" came from his skullish lip. "You don't know? ha, ha, ha, ha, ha. That's a fine answer to give a man whose name of the world than you ever will, and that before you were a baby. You ought to be ashamed of yourself. Where are your manners? Well, there, you needn't look so scared; 'the added 'I'm pretty good natured to-night, and feel like having a little chat with you. I've kept my mouth shut a good while, until my curiosity is getting the better of me, and I want to ask you a few questions."

"All right, sir," said the newspaper man, respectfully; and then, as a brilliant idea entered his confused mind—"I'll tell you what I can, if—"

"If you'll allow me to interrupt you afterwards on some subjects pertaining to the experiences of the part of you that isn't here, in the spirit land."

"Young man," said the skull solemnly after a moment's pause, "do you observe these sunken cheeks and hollow eyes? Behold in me the wreck of a once noble manhood. I was once prosperous and happy. In an evil hour I fell. I allowed an interview with Little Mac, of the Watchman, and here I am. I solemnly adjure you, give us a rest."

The reporter made an obedient gesture, and the skull went on: "What I want to find out first is, is my old friend A. D. Jones still living? Yes? Well, well; I don't miss his spirit take two or three trips around the ghost country, and 'jack' across Gov. Richmond."

"Old Man" Williams, but couldn't find Jones anywhere. I thought it was because he might have misread the train and gone up the river on a steamboat; but I'm glad to hear that he's still around and doing well. Jones was a trump in his younger days."

"It is town of Omaha has grown so big, I reckon. Who says? What Jim Boyd? Why, where's Col. Chase? He must have moved away. No? Is it possible. Well, you youngsters couldn't have done much better than to let Boyd go. You tell me Boyd is well fixed now and has put up a big opera house. That's just him. He'll blow A. D. in excuse my vernacular, young man—all he makes for improvements, if he's encouraged. You say you have a city council of twelve members too. Democratic."

UNITED STATES COURT.

The "Star Route" Indictments of Corbin, Iddings and Clary Announced.

Iddings Gives a Recognizance for Appearance.

Yesterday in United States court the indictments of Charles F. Iddings and Edward Corbin, agents for the Sidney-Deadwood star mail route, and Fred Clary, postmaster at Sidney, were announced. Iddings gave a recognizance for appearance during court, Guy Barton becoming his sureties. The indictments read "For conspiracy to commit an offense against and defraud the United States government."

The offenses charged in the indictments are as follows: About March 1878, the United States entered into a contract with Thomas A. McDevitt for carrying the mails on route No. 34,156, between Sidney, Neb., and Deadwood, D. T., for a compensation of $9,775 per annum. The schedule time fixed by the postoffice department was eighty hours between these two points. In November, 1878, the route was expedited and the schedule time was fixed at fifty hours during the summer and sixty-five hours during the winter. By the expediting of this route the compensation was increased to $23,325 per annum. The contract was sublet by McDevitt to Monroe Salisbury, Iddings & Corbin were the agents of the route at Sidney, and Clary was postmaster there. The indictments find that Corbin, Iddings and Clary conspired to make false mail bill, or reports to Washington, regarding the time and arrival of the mails, making such reports correspond nearly with the schedule time, whereas in reality the mails neither departed nor arrived on time, generally being delayed several hours and in one instance, two days.

These false reports are alleged to have been made for the purpose of defrauding the government, and to cover up the fact that the mail facilities between Sidney and Deadwood were entirely inadequate to the service. It is also claimed that when the route was supposed to be expedited the addition of extra horses and men, for which the difference between $9,775 and $23,325 was paid, that no extra facilities were furnished, and that it was impossible for the agents to carry the terms of the contract into effect, and that the parties indicted entered into a conspiracy to make false reports.

The indicted men claim that they fulfilled the terms of the contract, increased their force to seventy-five men and over three hundred horses, and that as far as possible the schedule time was conform.

A World of Good. One of the most popular medicines now before the American public, is Hop Bitters. You see it everywhere. People take it with good effect. It builds them up. It is not as pleasant to the taste as some other Bitters as it is not a whisky drink. It is more like the old-fashioned home-made tonic that has done a world of good. You don't feel just right yet Hop Bitters. Nunda News. nov15-decl

Morgan Mailed. A young man by the name of Morgan, a runner for an Omaha oil house, and the deputy sheriff of Polk county, got into an altercation with the proprietor of the "Star" oyster saloon on Tuesday night which resulted in Mr. Morgan and the deputy sheriff getting soundly thrashed, which no doubt had the effect of convincing them that they can't come to David and ride rough-shod on decency. Rising City Independent.

GREATEST REMEDY KNOWN. Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption is certainly the greatest medical remedy ever placed within the reach of suffering humanity. Thousands of once helpless sufferers, now proudly proclaim their praise for this wonderful discovery to which they owe their lives. Not only does it positively cure Consumption, but Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Hoarseness and all affections of the Throat, Chest and Lungs yields at once to its wonderful curative power as if by magic. We do not ask you to buy a large bottle unless you know what you are getting. We therefore earnestly request you to call on our druggists, I. S. & McMAHON, and get a trial bottle free of cost which will convince the most skeptical of its wonderful merits, and show you what a regular one dollar size bottle will do. For sale by I. S. & McMAHON. (4)

"WINE OF CARDUI" for Ladies only. A. C. F. Goodman.

After Burglars. Chief of Police Lyman, of Lincoln, was in the city on Tuesday, looking for a brace of crooks who had succeeded in burglarizing the apartments of a Miss Manley, and were supposed to have come to Omaha. He made a somewhat thorough search of the town, but was unsuccessful in finding his men. It is probable that they decided to go east before the officers got on their trail. Omaha isn't a very congenial place for suspicious characters.

SUICIDE AND DYSPYPSIA. A most remarkable cure for dyspepsia, "Wells' Health Renewer." The greatest tonic, best blood and liver remedy known. $1. Druggists, Depot C. F. Goodman.

Death of Miss Peabody. Miss Jennie Estelle Peabody, sister of Dr. James H. Peabody, died at the residence of her brother at 11:30 last night, after an illness of several weeks. The deceased was a prominent member of the Trinity church, and was beloved by all who knew her. Her death will leave a vacant chair in a sorrowing household and cause grief in a wide circle of friends.
