Know the Game

"My Queen," said he, "I'd like two pail" With you." The fair maid blushed, And said: "Now, Jack, I'd 'beat' you here." "For, dear, you see, I'm finished!" "But that ain't 'straight,'" replied her "Jack!"

LITTLE BLUE EYES.

Or, How She Helped Me Out of It.

"Can I sit with you?" "Certainly, sir." "Nice weather." "Splendid, indeed." "Crops growing finely?" "Yes, couldn't do better."

I was sitting in a passenger coach on a Wisconsin railroad, one day, years ago, when a good looking, pleasant spoken man came along, stopped at my seat, and the above conversation took place, the latter part of it after I had given him a part of my seat.

Now I am regarded as a social man. I like a joke, a good bit, and I think a sour, morose man, who uses his tongue only when obliged to, is bound to die of some terrible disease, and go to some place of red hot punishment.

On entering a railroad car I always look about for a talkative man, and then get as close to him as possible, and drain him dry, if the journey is long enough.

And I want to state one thing more. Left an orphan before I could realize the event which had made me one, I got kicked here and called there, and "grow up between folks," as they say. I ought to have had, at the time of which I write, a pretty thorough knowledge of human nature, and have been enabled to read in a man's face if he intended me evil. I did not pride myself on being over keen or extra sharp, but the knocking around among strangers ought to give one a good experience.

Well, the stranger and I fell into an easy train of conversation as we rode together, and in ten minutes I began to enjoy his company. He was a well made fellow, finely dressed, and he wore a fine watch and a sinner pure diamond ring. I never saw a man who could talk so easily and so pleasantly. It seemed that he had but to open his mouth, and the words fell right out.

I had traveled the south, so had he. I had heard in the loud roar of the Pacific; he knew all about it. I had been in a balloon, down in mine; been blown up, and repaired. He had experienced all these things, and was waiting for something to turn up of a more startling nature. We agreed on a railroad companion.

Did you ever meet a man who, though a stranger to you ten minutes before, could wrest from you secrets which you'd sworn to yourself not to reveal? Well, he was just as a man. It was not long before he commenced asking me questions. He did not seem to be trying to quiz or draw me out, but he asked me questions in such a sly, round-about way, that before I knew it I was giving him my history.

I was just at that time on the point of being admitted to the bar of Wisconsin as a student of Law & Law, of Briverville. The firm were old lawyers, with a lucrative practice, and it had been talked over that in about a month I was to become the "Co." of the firm. A year before, an old farmer named Preston, down about four miles from Grafton, had died, and his matters had been put into the hands of Law & Law for settlement. Preston had died rich. He had money in the bank, real-estate, mortgages, etc., and everything was settled up to the satisfaction of the relief and the fatherless.

About a year before his death, being short for money and not wishing to sell anything at a sacrifice, Preston had given a mortgage on his farm for $3,000. While the papers read "one year from date," there was a verbal agreement that it should be lifted off any day when Preston desired. A month after, when, having the money, he desired to clear off the paper, the old money-bags holding it refused to discharge, wishing to secure his interest for a year.

I was on my way to ascertain the date of expiration. A fire among other papers had destroyed the memoranda, and I must go down and get the date from old Scrip, who lives south of Grafton about five miles. The stranger had pumped all this out of me in ten minutes; and yet I never once suspected that he was receiving information.

usual, and the 12th came at length. Law & Law had arranged for me to go down with the money, and I looked upon it as a business of no special importance. "We know you are all right," remarked the senior partner, as I was about to go; "but I want to give you a word of warning, nevertheless. Don't take any strangers into your confidence until you have passed out the money, and look out who sits next to you."

It was something new for him to caution me, and I did not but wonder at it; but in the bustle of getting on board the train I forgot what he said. Ordinary prudence had induced me to place the money, which was all in bank bills, and divided into three packages, where the left hand of a pick-pocket could not reach it.

Interested in a newspaper, time flew by as we went west, and, at length, the hoarse voice of the brakeman warned me that I had reached Grafton. I had leaped down and was making my way to the livery stable when I heard a familiar voice, and looked up to see Raleigh. He was seated in a buggy, and had, seemingly, waited for me to come up.

"Don't express your surprise," he began, as I stopped at the wheel. "I did intend to go away, but I changed my mind, and I like this section so well that I am going out to-day to look at a farm, with a view of purchasing. Come, ride up to the hotel."

We rode up, ordered a lunch, and while we were discussing it Mr. Raleigh discovered that the farm he was going to see was just beyond the Scrips.

How fortunate! I could ride out with him to see the farm, and return in his company, and he would be greatly pleased. I was also pleased. If anyone had told me, as we got into the buggy, that George Raleigh meant to return with my money in his pocket and my blood upon his hands, I should have believed him a lunatic. And yet George Raleigh had planned to do that very same thing.

It was a lovely day in June, and my cool breezes and the sight of meadows and green groves made my heart grow larger. My companion was very talkative, but he didn't even hint at my errand. "Oh, excuse me," he said, "the drug has taken effect. I shall utter your hands and remove the gag. When you come out of your sleep—if you ever do—you had better crawl out to the road, where you will be most likely to meet with some traveler. I want to use the horse and buggy, otherwise so I would leave them for you."

"How coolly he talked!" He treated the matter as if it was a regular business transaction in which I fully acquiesced. He had me in a fast prison, and I felt that he could do just as he pleased. While I was thinking how the little white face appear between the pulps again, but in a moment it faded away and its place was taken by the embrowned phiz of a farmer. He looked from me to Raleigh and back again, and I winked to him in a way which he readily understood. His face disappeared, and I felt that I should be saved.

"No, old scrip won't get his tin to-day," muttered Raleigh, staring away the bills in his pockets. "You will go back to Law & Law, feeling put out and cut up. But they shouldn't blame you—it is not your way at all. True, you'd minded your business on the cars and had not been so free with a stranger, this would not have happened. I was on my way to Milwaukee, and had no thought of such rich pickings here."

"Now, in just about a minute we'll be through with this business," he remarked, trying to put the mouth of the flask between my jaws. I rolled my head to one side and he did not succeed. He was jamming the flask against my teeth, when I caught sound of a soft step, the crash of a club, and Raleigh rolled off my body. He tried to leap up, but three or four farmers struck him down, and one of the blows rendered him senseless. Before he came to I was free of ropes and gag, and we had him nicely bound.

Over beyond the pasture a farmer and his hands were raking up hay. "Little blue eyes," only 8 years old, had wandered off after strawberries, and had fortunately witnessed part of Raleigh's proceedings. She had hurried back to her father and told him that "a man was all tied up there," and he had returned to the fence. Understanding the situation, he and his men had moved around so as to secure an advantage. Raleigh's capture was the result.

When the rascal found his senses he was terribly taken back, and he cursed enough for a whole Flanders army. We took him back to Grafton, and when I last saw him he was on his way to the penitentiary to serve a sentence of fifteen years. The mortgage was lifted, after all, and the gift that Law & Law sent to little Katie Gray kept her in dresses for many a year.

and he conquered me in a moment. Laying me on my right side, looking towards the fence, he tied my hands, and then forced a gag into my mouth. "There, now, you see you are nicely fixed up, and all because you acted like a fool, instead of a sensible young lawyer soon to be admitted to the bar."

While he was speaking—indeed while he was trying me—I had caught the sight of the white face of a little girl looking at us between the rails of the fence. I could see her great blue eyes. There were red stains around her mouth and on the little hand resting on board the train I forgot what he said. Ordinary prudence had induced me to place the money, which was all in bank bills, and divided into three packages, where the left hand of a pick-pocket could not reach it.
