

THE PRESIDENT'S NEW HOME

Appearance of the White House After It Has Been Renovated and Refurnished.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—The White House, after its baptism of paint and decorations and its new dressing of rich furniture, is greatly improved in appearance.

The double door, opening from this hall into the East Room, is hung with gracefully draped Turkish curtains on the inner side, from an oblong bracket.

The furniture in this room is rich, but not very showy. The entire effect is subdued and pleasing.

The Green Room is still the Green Room, but not the bottle green of the past. The tint is of the faintest Nile green, and their freshness makes the room beautiful.

The man looked up roughly, and if the speaker had been arrayed in fine broadcloth with a weed in his silk hat he would have given him ungracious answers.

"I don't know as I do," said the workman gently, "but if you think you can tell me about where the grave is, I'll try and help you."

"That grave don't look like as if it ever had sweet-williams planted on it, does it, old man? I'm favorable to them flowers myself. Hallo! What did you say the name was?"

"Yes, yes," answered the old man, eagerly; then a look of bitter disappointment crept over his face. "You don't mean it," he said slowly, "they're never gone and put their great monument over Hannah Jane, she that wanted birds and flowers and the blessed air of heaven above her and the sun shinin' and the dew fallin' on the spot where she slept; she that built a ladder to the skies in good deeds and was humbler than a little child, and would rather have had a board at her head, down in the old graveyard, with plain Hannah Jane on it carved by me! It don't seem right, that's all!"

He went away sadly and lingeringly and he never came back, but the man he talked to planted sweet-williams and rose slips on the grave and it looks strange to see them tangled in wild profusion about the stately marble, and whenever he sees a funeral stop near that spot he looks to see if another grave is dug there. "For some day," he says to himself while he works, "my old man will come back to his Hannah Jane."

No matter what the ailment may be, rheumatism, neuralgia, lameness, a lame neck, or if other treatment have failed—hope on! go at once for THOMAS' ELECTRIC OIL. It will cure you immediately.
