As usual, the principal suff rer was the street railway, the iron being covered in many places to the depth of reveral mehes. Up to ten o'clock no cars were run at all and there was no regularity about them even at noon. A gang of seven men was set to work about 7 o'clock on the south end of the track and another of a dozen on the northern tracks to clear off the frozen mud with 1 icks. A regular blockade occurred on Fifteenth street, where five cars were lying at one time. The worst place to get over was between Boyd's Opera House and Union block, where the first car got off the track and was helf an hour getting on again. It had two passengers in it helds. As usual, the principal suff rer was the track and was helf an hour getting on again. It had two passengers in it, ladies, who took the jolting and delay quite good naturedly. The next car was empty, but met the same fate, and up to 1 o'clock the blockade had not been lifted.

For unately the crossings were tolerably clear of mud, owing to the washing they received last night, and walking was not near so bad as on Thursday.
