LEFROY'S EXECUTION.

A Business-Like Hanging With

Marwood's Latest Improvements.

London News Nov. 20.

The execution of Lefroy, which took place yesterday morning inside Lewes Jail, was carried out simply, unceremoniously and effectually.

The Lewes jail is so arranged that when the execution takes place the subject drops execution table the surface of the earth. The drop is "flush" with the sides and base, of eleven or twelve feet in depth.

Above the drop is a cross-beam supported by two uprights from which is suspended the rope. On moving a lever, which is connected with belts sustaining the drop, the latter parts in the center, either side hanging on its hinges, and the sight of a criminal hanging lifeless in the air is thus avoided.

Shortly before the execution took place there were not a dozen spectators, exclusive of policemen, outside the jail. When it was over, and those whose duty it was to witness it left the prison, they found that a small knot of gazers had increased, perhaps to the number of fifty or sixty, but certainly not to more than that figure.

At about 8:30 the reporters to the number of about fifteen—who, with the exception of the jail officials, were the only witnesses of the execution—were admitted to the jail. At 8:45 the first note of the prison bell was sounded, and its knell continued at regular intervals until everything was over.

At 8:55 a warden summoned the reporters who followed him through two court yards, in which, as the paved pathway indicated, the convicts are in the habit of taking their daily exercise.

In the third and final one was erected the gallows. Just inside the doorway stood Marwood with his pinioning apparatus in his hand. He was summoned away, and a pause of some few moments ensued.

The voice of the chaplain was heard, and those standing in the court yard bared their heads and turned towards a further door, whence the procession was issuing.

The chaplain robed in his surplice, came first, pronounced in a loud voice, though with evanescent signs of emotion, the appointed service. The central and conspicuous object of that little band that slowly defiled towards the platform where he was to meet his fate, was of course, Lefroy himself.

He was dressed in a brown tweed suit. He had no covering to his head and no collar round his neck. The gray woolen shirt he wore was open and turned back at the edges in front, showing his long, thick neck. His face, which was pale enough during the trial, now glowed not a vestige of color.

His eyes were turned upward toward the sun, which was shining full in his face and its glare imparted an unusual brilliancy to them. Arriving at the drop he allowed himself quietly to be placed there and pinioned as to his legs. Marwood was scarcely a minute about his task, and while the chaplain was yet repeating the words of the service he had come to the side, pulled a lever and Lefroy had disappeared from sight.

That death was instantaneous there can be no doubt, for there was no evidence of any subsequent struggling. The drop was at least eight feet, and in all probability the neck was at once broken. The whole business of the execution occupied about three minutes.

The coroner's jury then viewed the body with regard to which there is nothing to be said, but that the face wore a calm appearance and that there was a slight abrasion of skin on the neck.

The London Gazette, 1666

Portland (Oregon) Police.

We have before us a copy of The London Gazette, dated September 10, 1906. It is a four-page paper two columns on each side, and contains eleven by seven and a half inches about the size of an old-fashioned window-pane. It is a queer specimen of literary work; nearly the whole paper is taken up in a description of the great fire in London.
