

CROMWELL'S HEAD.

The Protector's Head as It is Preserved To Day.

It is not generally known that the embalmed head of Oliver Cromwell is extant. Some few years since, at any rate, it was sent to a shop and was sold to Mr. Horace Wilkinson, of Sovernack, Kent. It was then in good preservation, and its phrenological aspect presented several striking peculiarities. Thus the length, from the forehead to the back of the head, is quite extraordinary—far greater than in ordinary men. The forehead, or frontal portion, is low, but very broad; the orbits of the eyes are very large, the cheek bones and the bridge of the nose are high, and the lower jawbone, which is ordinarily curved, is short, straight, and forming a right angle with its point of insertion. The head is one indicating a brain (which is but the instrument of the mind) of great activity and great capacity, corresponding with the remark of Cromwell's secretary, who said that "it was as large as a sheep and as storehouse."

Keep It Before the People

The farmer who owns $1,000 worth of property is assessed at from $500 to $750. The Union Pacific railroad is worth on the market from $80,000 to $100,000, and is assessed at about $10,000 per mile. The B. & M. is worth about $50,000 per mile and is assessed at about $4,000 per mile. Why is this discrepancy in the assessment and taxation of two different kinds of property in the same state? Simply because the farmers are assessed by conscientious men who perform their duties in accordance with law and justice, while the railroads are assessed by the state officers, a majority of whom are and have been notoriously the tools of the railroad corporations. Whenever this board of equalization meets to make a railroad assessment there may be found closeted with them Messrs. Poppleton and Thurston, of Omaha, T. M. Marquette of Lincoln, and a number of lesser lights, representing some of the best legal ability of the state, representing both political parties, and every man a retained attorney for one of Nebraska's great railroad corporations. Now it matters not whether these men delude our state officials with plausible arguments or purchase them with hard cash and railroad favors—the fact remains that the farmer pays ten times as much tax upon a given amount of property as a railroad company does. And now what are you going to do about it?

WINDOW DRESSERS

The New Trade of Arranging Shop Front Windows. New York Herald. To such a degree has the penchant for show windows been carried that at the present time some score or so of establishments employ the services of a special class of men and women who are known technically as "window dressers," and whose sole, or at any rate chief business it is to attend to displaying properly the goods in the show windows.

Australian Customs.

When a girl is betrothed her mother and aunts may not look at or speak to the man for the rest of his life, but if they must him they must allow by the wayside and cover up their heads, and when he and she are obliged to speak in one another's presence, they use a peculiar lingo, which they call "turn-tongue." This queer dialect is not used for concealment, as every body understands it, and some examples of it show that it has much in common with the ordinary language. To give an idea of the state of formality into which life has come among these supposed free-and-easy savages, mention may be made of the duties of the bridesmaid and groomsmen. When the married pair have been taken to the new hut built for them, for the next two moons the groomsmen and the husband sleep on one side of the fire, the bride and the wife on the other, the new married couple being allowed to speak or to look at one another. The bride is called a "not-look-around," and the pair in this embarrassing position are a standing joke to the young people living near, who amuse themselves by peeping in and laughing at them.
