MINNESOTA BUG JUICE.

A Racy Description of Judge Cox Court in Tall Timber District.

Beer in Bottles and Three in a Bed.

A press dispatch from St. Paul gives a sketch of the impeachment trial of Judge Cox by the Minnesota senate last Friday:

The monotony of the Cox impeachment trial was broken to-day by the appearance of a lively witness for the defense, whose evidence throws as much light on the peculiar diversions indulged in by judge and bar in Cox's district as any of the spicy evidence for the prosecution. Col. Samuel McPhail, a rural militia officer, said, on the fourteenth article: "Judge Cox did not drink in Marshfield, nor the crowd with him. He was sober at Tyler. That evening Judge Cox, myself, and another drank a bottle of Milwaukee beer and had some lunch. During Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, at Tyler, Judge Cox was sober; saw no difference in his looks; and not the least doubt of his perfect sobriety then, and have not now; was present that night in the parlor when the bottle was passed around under a hat." Witness explained why the judge didn't drink out of that bottle by explaining that it was passed around on one side of the room, and that when it got over to where he and the judge were there was nothing in the bottle for anybody to drink. "Saw Judge Cox one morning only on which he was not undressed. At that time he had his vest and pants on; had to pass through the judge's room to get out of mine. Sunday morning I saw the judge shaving himself. He seemed to be sober; no evidence of a spree the night before; saw no symptoms of red and inflamed eyes in the judge at Tyler. If he was cockeyed I didn't discover it; don't think the judge was any part drunk. I had taken a drink myself that morning at Tyler; had no bottle, and was as sober as I am now; drank what we call "bug-juice" in that country. It doesn't kill exactly, but some folk's mightn't relish it; met the judge about three hours after, about 3 o'clock in the afternoon; sat in a seat with the judge in going to Marshfield. I ordered the beer myself—not a small bottle, but an ordinary bottle; don't generally order small bottles. The judge took a drink. The next morning in a room drank bug-juice; there were three of us, and we drank about one-third of a pint."

Question—"That was enough, wasn't it?"

Answer—"Well, we made it do. [Great laughter.] The judge and myself then went to breakfast and then to the court-room; did not drink any more. I don't know what was going on in the judge's room Thursday night; saw him in bed the next morning; brought in the same little flask. There were more of us that morning—some five of us—and we dispatched it; didn't drink any more after that morning; was busy that day, but was in the court-room half the time; don't know what the judge did that day. Next morning when I went into the judge's room I wasn't dressed. When I saw he had company I went back and put on my pants. [Laughter.] That night we had a couple of bottles of beer. The judge probably drank some of it, as he was in the crowd."

Question—"Was the crowd as sober-looking as the senate?"

Answer (looking around)—"Well, I don't see any gentleman who looks as though he was under the influence. Friday night there was a party in the judge's room playing cards; don't know one card from another; understood they were playing for the two bottles of beer. The judge was playing; can't say they were playing for beer. The judge and Whitney were in bed the next morning. Thursday night three of us slept in my bed. Coleman was one of them. I found him in my bed and let him stay. He had no permission from me nor from the landlord. When the hat went round the judge took it and looked at it. The judge's demeanor was about the same as on the two previous days; can't testify as to the judge's condition on Monday; had a bottle in the room on Saturday night. On Sunday the judge and myself went to Lake Benton, and on returning I was pretty well fuddled. We got some what we call 'sweat on the cat' in that county; can't say what the judge's condition was that day. He was sober when we left Tuesday morning."

Grover McGuire, a Bird Island lawyer, was another likely witness. He on cross-examination testified that he was at the same hotel with Judge Cox, and saw him drinking liquor on different days, but always in the evening. Witness, in describing the difference, in his opinion, between "sober" and "perfectly sober," said: "If a man whose capacity I know to be ten drinks of whisky takes one, I deem him one-tenth drunk. I know Judge Cox intimately, and have traveled with him. I consider him a man of a capacity of fifteen or twenty drinks. He did not take fifteen or twenty drinks to my knowledge during the entire term. I don't think half a dozen drinks would be noticed upon Judge Cox."

Mr. McGuire is a shrewd, keen lawyer, of more than average intelligence, and was incisive, often humorous, and never hesitating in his replies. He proved the strongest witness the defense has thus far produced.

A TERRIBLE STORY.

A Den in the Woods Occupied by Degraded Men and Women Whom They Have Ensnared.

St. Louis Republican.

The East St. Louis police were, on Friday night, notified by parties living above the National stock yards—East St. Louis, but outside the city limits—that, in an old, dilapidated hut, in that region, a number of young men and girls were living in a worse than polygamous manner. Yesterday morning Lieut. Griffin and Officer Lynch dressed themselves as hunters and with gun on their shoulders went out to the locality where the hut is situated, in the woods, for the purpose of making an investigation. They became convicted that the hut was one in which very ill-conduct was practiced. These officers then called on Officers O'Neil and Dowd and a raid was made on the place. The den was a small, filthy, dilapidated one room concern, long since deserted for respectable living purposes. The only articles of furniture in the room were an old tick filled with filthy straw and a number of rags and other rags upon the middle of the floor, which were used by the inmates for beds. The police captured Bud Hammond, Joseph Frake, alias Alberts, Ed Hunter and a young girl, aged 13 years, named Lulu Potter. They were taken down to the police station and locked up. From those arrested it was learned that Jerry Woods and another young man named Molair made this place their haunt, and also that Jennie Potter, aged 16, sister to Lulu, and another girl named Anna Taylor had been inmates of the den up to Monday last. The girl Lulu Potter told a horrible tale, most of which is unfit for publication. She says that a little more than three weeks ago her sister, Jennie Potter, Anna Taylor and herself left Alton, their home, to go to Belleville to live out. They walked most of the way, and in passing this lonely hut they were accosted by several young roughs who asked them many questions. Finally, the young roughs threatened to choke them unless they went into the house, at the same time taking hold of them and pulling them toward the door. They were forced into the room, and Lulu has remained there until she was rescued yesterday, while her sister and Anna Taylor escaped on Monday, and probably went to Belleville. She says that the roughs would not let her go. The females were threatened with all possible indignity. Several of the hoodlums would go out each day and bring provisions for the whole party, and in this manner they lived. Hunter was brought before Justice Lynn yesterday, and he satisfied the justice that he had only just happened to drop into the hut when the police pounced upon it, and he was released. Woods and Molair have not yet been captured, but the police expect to have them by this morning. A charge of rape has been preferred against Hammond, the 13-year-old girl Lulu Potter being the prosecuting witness. He will have his examination to-morrow before Justice Lynn. It is not believed that the females are of the best character, or else they might have attracted help from passers-by ere this.

THE NEW YORK INSURRECTION.

Officers of the Law Resisted in Greenwood, N. Y., and the Governor is Forced to Intefere.

An Albany special to The New York Herald gives the following particulars of the Steuben county insurrection: Gov. Cornell's proclamation declaring the town of Greenwood, in Steuben county, in a state of insurrection because of the forcible resistance of a portion of the people to the collection of taxes is the first proclamation of the sort under the criminal code, and is issued under peculiar circumstances. By the new code the governor, when called upon to do so by the sheriff, district attorney, county judge, or indeed by almost any person of authority in the county, as the law is interpreted in the governor's office, may issue such a proclamation. In this instance Gov. Cornell was visited by the sheriff, deputy sheriff and district attorney of Steuben county, who represented that a considerable number of inhabitants of the town of Greenwood, in that county, had on several occasions forcibly resisted the collection of a tax levied on the town to pay the interest on the bonds of the Rochester, Hornellsville & Pine Creek railroad and for certain costs incurred in a protracted fight made against the legality of the bonds in question. From their statements it would appear that the more peaceably disposed citizens of the town paid the tax, but a greater number refused, and when the officers attempted to levy upon the personal property of those refusing, a body of a hundred men or more, to the music of a drum and fife, and some of them armed, accompanying the sheriff from place to place, and by threats and other means so deterred any persons from bidding that the efforts of the officers to realize upon the sale were fruitless. The authorities named said to Gov. Cornell, that unless by the intervention of executive authority, they could collect only a comparatively small proportion of the tax, which amounts to a little over $8,000.

ORIGIN OF THE DISPUTE.

From other sources it is learned that a number of years ago bonds were issued by several towns along the route of the proposed road to aid in its construction, of which Greenwood voted some $7,500, but the road was never finished, no part of it being in operation and parts of it in fact having never been even graded. The several towns, with the exception of Greenwood, having paid the interest on their bonds under protest and Greenwood has contended in the courts that they are invalid. A recent decision in the court of appeals has overthrown this plea, and the recent proceedings were under this decision.

Greenwood is a little town of 1,500 inhabitants, near the Pennsylvania line, and the Steuben county authorities who have been here claim that the people have been incited to and helped in their resistance by oil men and miners from across the border. Persons familiar with the facts claim that no violence has been offered to the collection of the tax further than the noisy demonstration that attended attempts of the sherm to sell out those refusing to pay, and assert that the sentiment in the town is such that residents at least would not bid against their neighbors. It is thought probable that if the disorder continues the sheriff will call out the militia, which he has the power to do under the proclamation.
