Despite the inclemency in weather very fair business in staple and department goods was done by some leading jobbers te-day, and there is a decidedly better feeling in this branch trade. The demand at first hands have been mostly restricted to such assortments as are needed for renewal in jobbers stock, and some large transactions with exporters and connectors are reported. In cotten goods there was a fair business in leading markets; blanched goods and brown and colored cottons were insteady though moderate debleached goods and brown and colored cottons were unsteady though moderate demand. At first hands jobbing trade has been fairly active, good packing business having been accomplished by larger houses. Reporting Seciety News.

There is often a pretense of disgust on the part of society people that publicity should be given their affairs, but this is generally all put on, and frequently the groatest pains are taken to secure the coveted newspaper notice. The description of the dress of a bride who was married in Grace church no long ago appeared in a leading newsper. The bride had writ-ten it herself. In fact, she revised the entire account of the wedding, as she happened to know a man on the paper, who obtained for her the copy at an early hour in the day.

MAKING HANDS BEAUTIFUL.

Cosmetic Gioves and Thimbles to Give Shape to the Ends of the Fingers.

New York Sun In one of the side streets up town is the office of a "Hand Doctor." exterior of the house has no sign or door-plate to attract the notice of the general public, but it is evident that the fashionable world has been informed of the doctor's whereabouts from the number of richly dressed people who frequent the office. Curi-esity induced a reporter to visit this place last week. The servant who answered the door bell showed the visitor into a front parlor, where a the curiosities of the office was amusing. In a case on one side of the room were wax models of hands of all shapes and sizes. Fat hands, thin bony hands, some with long fingers, some with short hands as they should be, and hands as they should not be. Opposite these a show case contained an assortment of soaps, salves, and lotions, and a lot of gloves, coarse and clumsy, that seemed strangely out of place in a place devoted to hand beauty. The young woman said: "They are cosmetic gloves. These are only a few of the kinds that we use. The doctor prepares others to suit the needs of different patients. These are prepared to whiten the hands. They are spread inside with a preparation of yolk of egg, oil of sweet almonds and tincture of benzoin. The double wrap at the wrist effectually protects the cuff from being soiled. The gloves next to them are to soften the hands, and of honey, myrrh, wax and rose water. The gloves in the corner are still more powerful. They contain as strong agents as can safely be applied to the hands, and cannot be used when the skin is chapped, scratched or broken in any place. They are lined with a preparation of tartaric oil, lemon juice, oil of bitter almonds, brown Windsor soap and some other ingredients." Some puffed-out bags looking like boxing gloves proved to be bran mittens, and the atterdant explained the use of a box of curious-looking silver thimbles about two inches long: "There are finger tips for shaping the ends of the fingers. Tapering fingers are not an impossibility. Ladies are willing to undergo inconvenience and injury for the sake of tapering waists, but make no effort to improve the sh pe of their hands,"

As a lady closely veiled came out from the back parlor and left the room, the doctor announced himself said, that they had no list of witnesses and didn't know, in fact,

Stains and dark lines about the knuckles were then touched with some seid on a bit of chamois skin, and the hands were anointed with cold cream This process being completed, the doctor requested his patient to sit be-fore a table near a window, and, seating himself opposite and opening a case of ivory instruments, he asked: "Are you superstitious about nail
