A Lack of Harmony.

A fellow journalist writes us from Ontonagon, Mich. 'I am having a great deal of trouble lately with my paper. As you know, I publish a nice little country paper here, with patent liver and alimony every column...

The trouble is that my associate, who lives in Milwaukee, and edits the inside, is very ultra on some points, and makes the paper very radical on some important questions, while I am a little bit inclined to be violent myself on the same matters.

Now if the member of the staff who attends to the cast iron matter for the inside at Milwaukee, thinks that I'm non-committal, and conservative agnostic on everything, and that he can shape the policy of the paper with his shears, and compel me to own editorialials for the outside, to agree with him, he will meet with a crushing disappointment some day.

Now for instance, I always hated Conkling. I couldn't endure his ever lasting pomposity, and King-of-the-Carnival-Islands style of standing behind the throne and stirring the ship of state regariness of everybody else.

Well, what does this patent inside editor of mine at Milwaukee do, but endorse the nomination of Conkling for Associate Justice, and paralyze an editorial I had all written denouncing the whole thing as a scheme to keep Conk on the carpet ready for '84.

I tell you it isn't pleasant to get a lot of clear, crisp editorial matter all ready for the Saturday morning paper, and know that it is in type already for press, and then Friday night, get your paper by express all printed on one side, and jam full of radical rot on the opposite side of the question.

It worries me to make the staff harmonize. If I telegraph the electrotype editor at Milwaukee that the policy of the paper will be against the Chinese bill, and settle that all right, he will make some grand and peculiar break in another direction, and weaken the influence of the journal.

What's the use of trying to mould public opinion in a certain direction when a one-eyed galoot two or three hundred miles away is moulding it in another direction with his electrotype editorials.

People here have got so they come in and ask me whether I'm going to espouse the stalwart element next week with my inside or outside. Then they laugh a cold, heartless laugh and go away. It's pretty near settled that I've got to make a change or lose my political influence.

Then in the matter of patent medicine ads, there is going to be trouble. Two weeks ago I wrote up a Jim Crow concern in New York and said that it was undertaking to foist upon the civilized world a patent plaster for the back, made of old socks with glue and molasses on them; warranted to cure hypochondria and epilepsy.

The Difference in Hugging. An eastern paper, to encourage hugging in the locality, has published, says: 'A Wisconsin man, while hugging his girl of an evening, received a telegram stating that he had fallen heir to a fortune.' The eastern paper is right in its efforts to stimulate a healthy sentiment in favor of hugging, but it does wrong to hold out such inducements as it will not be one time in ten thousand that a man, while hugging a girl will receive such a dispatch. He will oftener receive a dispatch, bound in leather, from the girl's father, which will inform him that he has fallen over a fence, and is heir to a lame back. There should be no money consideration in a case of hugging, and no hope of falling heir to anything. It is fortunate enough to a man to have a girl to hug. Hugging can never become what it should be, our great national recreation and enjoyment, our picnic, as it were, until all the thought of outside matters is eliminated from it, and the hugging is simply done for instance, because there is a good opportunity, and no one to say nay. The difference in hugging can readily be seen by those who have done a little of it themselves, if they go to a theater and watch the actresses and actors. It is not once in a hundred times that hugging on the stage is done because both parties like it, but is always done for money, at so much a week and wardrobe furnished. The actor comes up to the scratch like a hired man, and puts his arm around the actress as though he was holding up a tobacco sign, and the actress smiles a two-for-a-quarter smile and looks as though she was taking pills. We have often seen a couple of lovers in the audience, who probably know scientific hugging when they see it, look at this stage hugging and curl up their lips with scorn, and look at each other as much as to say, 'If it was us on the stage playing that scene we would break the audience all up.' Occasionally a couple of stage lovers unbend themselves and get in a hug or two that breaks a corset string, but in one of those cases the other blushes and looks around at the wings to see whether the actor's wife or the actress' husband is looking. A year ago when the 'Hundred Wives' was played here MacGinley and Little Ada Gilman hugged old fashioned, and it seemed as though he would break her in two, and she looked as though she wished he would, but the last time the party was here, a strange woman was in Ada's place, and MacGinley hugged her as though he would rather hire a man to do it for him, and the woman acted as though she never had enjoyed a good hug in all her born days. There has got to be a certain amount of fellow feeling between them, or it is a mere matter of admission. Sometimes we think we would like to go on the stage and give some of these actors a few points that would be of great benefit to them in their business, but if we should offer to do so they would probably impute canister motives to us, and hit us with a stuffed club. It is not that we would care for the hugging, but the advancement of art. There are some actresses that the best huggers in the world could not hug and feel that he had got the worth of his money, and there are others that an actor would be justified in playing without a salary and boarding himself, just for one hug per evening and Wednesday and Saturday matinee. However this is a subject that we had never thought of until we saw the item in the eastern paper about the fellow's having a fortune left him.

Then in the matter of patent medicine ads, there is going to be trouble. Two weeks ago I wrote up a Jim Crow concern in New York and said that it was undertaking to foist upon the civilized world a patent plaster for the back, made of old socks with glue and molasses on them; warranted to cure hypochondria and epilepsy.

Then I said that the firm wanted me to publish its ad for ninety-nine years with the privilege of continuing the contract at the same price, viz; $2 per year and a plate.

I wrote some pretty harsh things about the outfit, and closed by saying that I'd see the blasted swindle in its lonely grave before I'd lend the influence of the paper to boost a cold, cruel swindle to the pinnacle of fame. When the paper came out on Saturday, I found that my Milwaukee assistant had inserted the ad with three-quarters of a column of glowing gush in the way of reading notices.

You can readily see what the effect of such a journalistic course will ultimately be.

Sometimes the Milwaukee man gets on a large and swerving drunk, and then he puts in selections wrong side up, and beads his editorials pretty bad. That's the time he does the most injury to the paper because he is liable to write up a beer garden instead of the crop report and his selections from other papers are not judicious. One day he cut out a two-column description of a rooster combat from The Police Gazette and crowded out the entire telegraphic summary.

What does he think the people of Northern Michigan care for a rooster war in New York? We don't care a cent, and he ought to know it.
