Raising Corn for Seed.
Not many years ago nearly every farmer raised, cleaned and put up every variety of vegetable seed which he sowed in his garden. It was regarded as economical to save garden seeds in this way. In some places it was necessary for every gardener to be his own seedman, as the local market was poorly supplied with the seeds of vegetables. At present scarcely any farmer or gardener raises the seeds he plants, as it is found to be more economical to buy them of dealers. The seeds purchased are generally true to name, of the most improved varieties, and of pure stock.
