MONEY AND MUSCLE.

Thoughts Presented by Rev. Mr. Lemen Concerning Labor and Capital.

He Favors the Side of Labor and Strikes at Monopolies.

There was a large audience gathered at the Baptist church Sunday evening to listen what the pastor, Rev. Mr. Lemen, had to say concerning "The Relationship of Labor and Capital." He took as his text a passage in revelations: "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity; he that killeth with the sword must be killed by the sword."

The speaker interpreted the passage as meaning that vengeance when taken is hard by man led to still further troubles and vegeance. Vengeance alone belongs to God, and He would take care of the right and see that justice was meted out. The principle laid down in the text was a true one, and applicable to these times and to the question in hand. Those nations which had conquered others by the sword had in turn been conquered, and those who had enslaved others, had in turn been led into captivity. History showed this to be true. Several instances were cited, and the condition of many European countries pictured as illustrative, while in our own land the slavery of the blacks had been paid in blood and sorrow.

The speaker showed that at present capital was thus leading labor into captivity. He cited facts and figures, first from Europe and then from this land, showing how labor was being crushed and crowded into the dust. In Europe priestcraft and kingcraft were responsible. White laborers were being given a pittance, royal families were being supported in luxury and idleness, and drawing immense sums from the sweat and blood of the toiling masses. In this country capital was crushing labor as in Europe kingcraft was crushing it. What should be done?

The speaker claimed that if the principles of christianity were universally accepted and followed, no such question would arise. The truth of God as a father and all men as brothers, if put into practical life everywhere, would end all trouble.

Some blamed christianity for many oppressions of the poor, but such shall remember that no such oppressions come from the principles of christianity but from those falsely professing to be following these principles. It might be set down as a fixed fact that anything oppressing to man in the name of christianity was Satan clothed as an angel of light.

The speaker having given the religious view, took up the question from a worldly standpoint. He pictured the two extreme views, one of which formed the doing away with all property rights, the other which would shoot down any one agitating in favor of labor. Both views he thought were wrong. Without a property right there would be no incentive for industry to accumulate property, and society could not exist. It was true that a man had no natural right to land any more than any other man. God gave the earth to all men, not to any particular man or set of men, just as he gave air and water to all men. In forming society, however, it was necessary for some individual rights to be given up for the good of the whole, and hence property rights had been established. A man must be protected in these rights by society, but on the other hand the man owed something to society in return for these rights A man could not by his own industry accumulate a million dollars. There was something wrong in society where it was possible for a man to accumulate such great fortunes, and there was always theft or injustice as the basis. If society protected a selfish, grasping dishonest man in the possession of a fortune, surely society was not bound to protect him after death in the disposition of the property. The speaker did not believe in wills. A man had no right after death to reach his ghostly arm back to manage worldly affairs longer. Such property should be divided in accordance with just laws among the immediate family only, and after they had received a fair portion, the rest should revert to society.

He also denounced corporations and monopolies, and gave warning that unless there was a halt, the time would come when one man would be king of all the railroads, and in fact king of this country. Labor in Europe had been so oppressed that it would have long since burst forth in fury and led its captors into captivity, but this country furnished an escape-valve. Labor was pouring in here, and when this country should be as thickly populated as Europe, and there was no other country to afford a vent, then what? Then must come the change spoken of in the text. Labor, made furious and at bay, would turn and strike. Blood would flow, and capital would in turn be led into captivity.

The speaker urged a change in the laws regarding wills, corporations and monopolies. He predicted the time when railroads must become national property, and urged all Christian people to think and pray concerning this contest, and do all in their power to resist the oppressors of labor.

Profits in Poultry.

Oftentimes an industry, which seems to be too insignificant for much attention to be bestowed upon it, has locked up within it, if intelligently pursued, the elements of large profits, and assured success. We believe the poultry business occupies, with a very large porportion of American farmers, the position above indicated. The stock of poultry is often looked upon as an almost intolerable nuisance, well enough to have about when an unannounced call is made by some member of the clergy, in such close proximity that some offender may be conveniently seized by the nape of the neck, but at most times regarded as intruders upon the soil. The truth is, the flock of chickens do much to hold the herds of noxious insects and vermin in check, as well as to furnish some most excellent "picking" at other times than when the "preacher" comes round, besides helping materially to swell the income from the farm, and richly deserve to be more highly esteemed than they are in very many instances.

In order that a flock of poultry may come up to the full value of profit to which they are capable, their habits and wants should be carefully studied. One of the worst practices possible to be followed is to allow them unrestrained access to a crib of corn. In such cases they become so fat as to be nearly barren in egg production, and fail materially in helping to swell the exchequer of the household, as they should do, and would, if properly fed with a fair allowance of mixed feeds should consist of oats, buckwheat, boiled potatoes, (even though you have to send to Scotland for them,) with a dish of gravel, and another of lime constantly near, to which they may have free access. They also need a supply of water, and good warm quarters for roosting places, and for shelter in cold or stormy weather, which will admit plenty of sunshine. The things provided, it will not be so materially different. This will be of great importance to a young breeder in establishing himself, especially with his customers who might depend on his counsel and advice. Integrity is everything. In fact, the business is a myth and a sham without it.
