IMPERISHABLE MONUMENTS. It is becoming more the fashion nowadays than formerly for men of fore their death. Giving after death has its drawbacks. Family broils and jealousies often ending in costly law suits are some of the most common attendants upon bequests from private fortunes. George Peabody was one of the first of Americans to appreciate this fact, and the larger portion of his magnificent gifts on behalf of the London poor and the southern illiterate was made during his lifetime. Ezra Cornell was another. His business sagacity and sterling common sense laid deep the foundations upon which he erected his noble university. Other large donors to educational in titutions who preferred in their life time to superintend the distribution of their benefactions were John C. Green, of New York, James Lenox, the Stuart Brothers, Joseph Sheffiield of New Haven, and George I. Seney, who is still living. The total of the gifts of those noble men of wealth reaches far into the millions, and is to-day bearing fruit.

The late James Lick, of San Francisco, was another of the noble band whose name is not born to die. The estate of James Lick was estimated at $3,000,000, and of this fortune $150,000 was set aside for his son and the residue was to be distributed to the Society of California Pioneers, the California Academy of Sciences, and the Lick observatory, the California side. THEELECTORALCOUNTBILLS

Two measures regarding the presi dential election have been introduced into congress at the present session, differing somewhat in details, but One Var.$10.00 Three Months.$3.00 agreeing on the main object which is able method of declaring the choice of the people for the chief executive. The bill introduced by Senator Hoar has already passed the senate. It provides that state electors shall meet on the second estions relating to News and Editorial maters should be addressed to the EDITOR of THE BEE.

Shall meet on the second Monday in January instead of December: that each state shall date. mine by its own tribunals any controversy as to what persons have been chosen or appointed as electors, and that this decision of the state court shall be final, and the vote counted by congress as cast by the electors thus confirmed. In case the state courts are not called upon and only one return is received by congress, it cannot be rejected except by a separate vote of both houses. When there are two returns from any state, that vote is to be counted which has been confirmed by the lawful state tribunals, congress by its two houses, acting separately, being the judge which tribunal is the lawful one. A final provision is made that if the counting of the votes by Congress shall not have been completed before the fifth calendar day after the meeting of congress for that purpose then no recess shall be taken by either house until the counting be finished. These are the main features of the senate bill, which in many respects seems to meet the failings which are The action of congress is made purely ministerial, except in cases where the judicial function is forced upon it by the state. The states are a sociation "down the North Fork of given the power of determining all in a country where woman enjoys the bility be the supreme court, and the proviso that in case of any controversy not decided by the state, both houses shall agree separately upon the votes to be counted assures fairness in the final decision by the national legislature.

Mr. Updegraff's bill, which receives has not yet put away his club, and the sanction of the house committee, is somewhrt more complicated. It leaves unchanged the time of the meeting of the electors providing that between the day of their choice in November and the Third Tuesday in December, on which they vote, the title to the office of elector may be determined, and that this title, if confirmed by the highest court in the state, shall be deemed conclusive. It further provider that congress shall be in session the second Wednesday in January next, after the meeting of electors, and shall count the votes; that upon the reading of cerwealth to dispose of a portion of their tificates the president of the senate jections, if any, must be made in writing and submitted without argument, stating clearly and concisely the grounds upon which they are based, and signed by at least one senator and one member of the house of representatives before they are received. The other portions of the house bill, relating to competing returns, the validity of returns certified to by the state tribunal. the method to be pursued in case of conflicting decisions from state tribunals and the final decision by the two houses voting separately where no judicial decision has been received are all identical with the bill passed by the senate, with one exception that both houses by their votes can reverse the decision of any state tribunal. A final and important proviso not found in the senate bill declares that, notwithstanding the decisions and declarations mentioned, the title of any claimant may be tried and determined by action in the nature of a writ of quo warranto, and that the action may be brought prior to the actual entry or usurpation, and must commenced within ten days after declaration of the election, of the defendant. Such action must be begun in the circuit courts of the United States in the district where the defendants or either of them re-

WHO SHALL BE COMMISS-

SIONERS As the passage of th tariff com-mission bill appears assured, the composition of the commission becomes subject of newspaper discussion. Correspondents of a speculative turn of mind have already apportioned the nine places on the commission among the various industries of the country with a view to make the commission, as far as possible, representative of them all. These suggestions generally come from free trade sources, which manifest an undue anxiety to place the revision of the tariff in the hands of the farmers, planters, cattle raisers, railroad men-or of any class, in fact, except the manufacturers, who are relegated to two, or, at the most, three, places at the foot of the list.

The discussion of the composition of the commission at this time is at least premature. First get your com mission. That is now the distinct issue at stake, and should not be complicated with considerations which can only properly arise afterward.

The one thing essential about the tariff commission is that it should be made up of protectionists. Those who wish to destroy the tariff are not the ones to be entrusted with its revision. They should be experts in tariff matters, have a just understand-ing of the relations of our various industries one to the other, and to the country, and not lean unduly to the supposed interests of any one of them. - [Philadelphia Press.

The tariff commission, according to its champions, is designed to look into existing abuses in the policy of protection with a view of revising the tariff on a basis that will afford proper encouragement to American industry without creating or fostering monopoly. A commission created for such an object should not be chosen from among men who are interested in continuing existing abuses because such a commission will never revise the tariff. As a matter of fact the proposed tariff commission was designed to delay and postpone tariff reform and the effort to pack the commission with extreme protectionists affords the proof that this commission is destined to be a costly fraud.

The charge that the suggestion to apportion the nine commissioners among the various industries of the country comes from parties who wish to abolish the entire tariff is unfounded. This paper, for instance, has always upheld the policy whereby America has built up great manufacturing industries, that give employment to several millions of workingmen. We have always maintained that America should not allow the pauper labor of Europe and Asia to compete with her in the production of articles that can be manufactured in this country. We believe it is in the interest of American farmers and cattle raisers, and even of the railroads. to sustain home manufactures, and we believe a tariff has been necessary as a source of revenue to conduct the affairs of our national government and der.—[Hastings Journal. affairs of our national government and meet the interest on our public debt. But we cannot and will not close our eyes to the fact that extreme protection of certain industries that no longer need protection has been the means of creating and fostering manufacturing monopolies that have grown rich at the expense of the producers. It becomes the duty of the government to revise the tariff and abolish these protected monopolies. This should have been done by congress without a commission. The longer action is decommission. The longer action is delayed the more sweeping the change will be when the tidal wave of popular opinion will enforce its demand. If President Arthur desires the tariff commission to be of any practical use in the proposed revision of the tariff, he will appoint only such men as are sincerely in favor of tariff reform. At best, however, the commission is a mere makeshift to enable political trimmers and straddlers to tide over another campaign.

Extensive preparations are being made for a mining and industrial exposition to be held at Denver in August and September. The exhibit will include mineral products from Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Dakota, Idaho, Utah, New Mexico and Nevada. The riches of the whole Rocky mountains and Sierra Nevada regions in precious metals, coal, iron, petroleum and timber, as well as the industrial products of the states and territories between the Rockies and the Pacific slope, will be on exhibition. There is every prospect now that this novel enterprise will surpass anything in the way of mining expositions that have ever been attempted on this continent.

THE announcement that A. T Stewart & Co. offer their business for sale will not be a surprise to many who know how the affairs of the concern have been conducted since the death of its founder. Judge Hilton's famous manifesto to the Jews was the death blow to their wholesale trade, and lack of business capacity on the part of the firm has resulted in driving away the best of the retail trade of the establishment. Stewart's at one time bore a national reputation. For the past six years it has been steadily fading out of sight.
