

MARGARET'S MARRIAGE.

A Marvellous Story of Courtship Brought Out in a Brooklyn Eagle.

Margaret Munroe is a good-looking, dark-eyed girl of 18. She was dressed very becomingly, and conducted herself in a lady-like manner. Until she came to this country, five years ago, she resided with her widowed mother at Roundstone, County Galway, Ireland. Her mother had a particular liking for one Patrick O'Donnell, an unmarried man, about 35 years of age. She made up her mind that Patrick should marry her daughter Margaret. Patrick was nothing loath. Mrs. Munroe broached the subject to Margaret, at that time a child of 14. Margaret received the suggestion with no favor. From time to time the mother persisted in bringing the proposed marriage to Margaret's consideration, and Patrick added his persuasive eloquence to Mrs. Munroe's words of authority. It was all in vain. Margaret's aversion to Patrick was increased, and she would not consent to marry the man whom her mother was so anxious to see her husband. Then the mother began to use threats, and the poor girl's life was harassed and her wit perplexed with the perpetual annoyance. Finally, as Margaret swore on the trial, and as the complaint alleged, Mrs. Munroe threatened that unless her daughter consented to the marriage forthwith, she would assist O'Donnell to get possession of her without the sanction of a legal marriage. This infamous threat of had such an effect on the girl that she consented to marry O'Donnell. At the same time she made the provision that she should not be obliged to live with O'Donnell after the marriage until the lapse of two years. The mother and her proposed son-in-law assented, and the marriage was performed by the Rev. Father Maloney, the parish priest, who was kept ignorant of the circumstances under which the contract had been entered into.

Margaret's elder sister, Catherine Munroe, was in this country, and when Margaret stipulated that the two years should elapse after the marriage ceremony, before she was required to live as the wife of O'Donnell, she had an eye to the chance of escaping hither and putting herself in the care of her mother. After the marriage she wrote to Catherine, who resided in this city, and told her the story of the wrong of which she had been the victim. Her sister did not fail the poor girl in her extremity. Catherine sent her a ticket and money to come to America, and Margaret duly received them. She packed up a few things and started on foot for the nearest railroad station. The mother and the father missed her and went in pursuit. On the highway, plodding along hopefully toward the land of freedom, she was overtaken by her pursuers. Her bundle was taken from her, every article of clothing was stripped from her; the money was taken from her, and the ticket for her passage across the Atlantic rent in pieces. Then she was driven back to her mother's dwelling. The plucky girl was not to be baffled. She applied to the police for protection, and her mother and her husband were arrested and bound over to keep the peace toward her. Then Margaret made her way to the seaboard and sailed for New York, where she arrived in due time.

After it was found that Margaret had got completely out of their clutches, Mrs. Munroe and her son-in-law laid their heads together for further plotting. O'Donnell applied to the parish priest with a view to procure what was termed an "ecclesiastical divorce." How far he succeeded there in that particular is not known, but he and Mrs. Munroe followed Margaret to this country. After some time Margaret procured a place in a highly-respectable family, to whom her peculiar case was made known. These excellent people greatly sympathized with her, and aided her in every way. Before she came into this family, however, she had several places. She was pursued from one to another, and her life was rendered so wretched that no sooner was she settled in one place than she had to flee elsewhere to get a little respite. Finally she reached the family already referred to, and met the sympathy and protection she so much needed.

On one occasion she was inveigled by her mother into a house in South Brooklyn and thrust into a room with O'Donnell; the door was then locked upon them and O'Donnell attempted to assault the girl. She eluded the grasp, smashed the window, cried aloud for help and finally jumped to the ground and escaped.

On the trial those facts were brought out. Mr. Barrett said that the application for an ecclesiastical divorce was before Bishop Loughlin, and Margaret had related all the facts to him. Both parties belonged to the Roman Catholic church, which did not allow either party to marry again after a civil divorce. Mr. Barrett also asked for an allowance. The defendant, he said, came to him and stated the case, and wished him to bring a suit to annul the marriage, with the husband as a plaintiff. Of course that was impossible, and counsel told O'Donnell that the wife alone could maintain an action. Then counsel began the present suit. Defendant had promised to pay him a fee, but had not done so, and now said he never would. An allowance was granted and a decree annulling the married entered.

Senator Davis' Third Downfall.

Washington Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun. President Pro Tem, Davis, of the senate, had this afternoon his third break-down since he became a member of that body. The trouble with the Illinois senator is that he forgoes an ordinary chair cannot sustain the 400-pound mass of flesh which belongs to him. He ought to follow the example of the late Senator Dixon H. Lewis, and only use chairs specially constructed to stand the strain. Judge Davis, who had put another senator in the big, strongly brace chair which he occupies as presiding officer of the senate, had been strolling around the chamber to stretch his legs, and, passing by the chair which belongs to Senator Brown, of Georgia, and is abundantly able to hold his weight of 125 pounds, he took a notion to rest himself. He sank into the chair, and the chair sank to the floor in broken pieces, which were strewn all over the judge as he lay sprawling. As he scrambled to his feet with a sense of injured dignity upon him he saw that Senator Butler, of South Carolina, who occupied the next seat, was smiling broadly, and his ear caught the whisper of some one on the other side styling him the "Jumbo" of the senate. He was so indignant that he stalked around the senate chamber several times, and then, becoming a little more composed, he selected another chair after a critical inspection and deposited himself in it. Senator Butler went over to him for mollifying purposes, but the judge waved him off and declined to listen to him. On the last occasion that he burst through a chair Mr. Conkling, who was then in the senate, chuckled audibly, and he would not take any notice of him for a week after.

"When Everything Else Failed." 1416 GRAND AVENUE, KANSAS CITY, MO., May 5, 1881. H. H. WARNER & Co.: Sirs—For ten years I endured the tortures of Bright's disease. Physicians and their prescriptions were of no avail. When everything else failed I resorted to your Safe Kidney and Liver Cure and was restored to perfect health. JUSTIN ROBINSON. 2831w

The May Century. The third of the five covers designed by Mr. Vaddler, the chief items of which are the figure of a young girl (Spring) with sunlight, flying bird, and a frame of blossoms, the three appropriate signs of the zodiac being combined as before in a medallion at the left, and the blossoms are carried up into the borders of the title. The general effect is animated, and the composition of the page is well arranged.

The emphasis thus laid upon the outside has its counterpart in the table of contents. Here, and also accompanying their several contributions (an innovation which, despite its drawbacks, seems to be called for, and is to be permanent) we find the names of Thomas Carlyle, James Russell Lowell, John G. Saxe, E. C. Stedman, W. D. Howells, Mrs. F. H. Burnett, Miss Constance F. Woolson, "Uncle Remus," Richard Grant White, Emma Lazarus, Archibald Forbes, H. B. Warner, Edward Everett Hale, Lang and Gosse, the English poets, and Toker and Saxton, two promising writers among the younger poets of this country.

The opening paper is entitled, "The Canadian Mecca," the subject being the Catholic pilgrimages to the village of St. Anne de Beaupre, on the St. Lawrence, and its alleged miracle-working spring. This is fully and interestingly illustrated by Henry Sandham, of Pennsylvania; Canada, and Davis, of West Virginia; Brown, of Georgia, and Plum, of Kansas. Senators Hill, of Colorado; Gorman, of Maryland; McPherson, of New Jersey, and Pendleton, of Ohio, are all worth more than $500,000. Many other senators are comfortably fixed, possessing little hoards of from $50,000 to $500,000. Among those who have but little comparatively here below, that is, not more than $100,000 apiece, are Morrill, of Vermont; Anthony, of Rhode Island; Rollins, of New Hampshire; Jones, of Nevada; Saunders, of Nebraska, and Allison, of Iowa.

"TOMATO-NOSED" JANE. An Astounding Female Phenomenon in Philadelphia—A Young Lady Who Has Not Looked Into a Mirror for Eight Years. "Good gracious! You newspaper men are worse than the Old Scratch!" said the fat lady smoothed out the folds of her well-worn alpaca dress, rocking violently in her dilapidated red rocking chair and glanced fiercely at a Philadelphia representative of the New York Mercury. "Who told you come to hunt us up? Indeed you shan't see or hear one word about her from me—that you shan't!" You'll spread it all around, and then we'll have all the old showmen just running and running to the house, and they can't be kept away with boiling water, either. Just like when we lived in Newark, some old maid, just as bad as a newspaper, went blabbing around about my Jane, and the old man had to club them museum and side-show fellers away from the house. They all wanted my 'Tomato-Nosed Jane,' as they called her. I don't want that trouble to go through with again for my one daughter, and I never be exhibited along with a lot of fat women, striped snakes, tattooed men and bald-headed monkeys."

After the visiting journalist had convinced the old lady that under no circumstance would he make public where she lived, and had soothed her with about six "sticksful" of Ciceroian eloquence, she consented that the remarkable daughter should be seen, and Jane was this young lady is now in her twentieth year. She is natural in respect except her peculiarly shaped nose. This feature of her face is the exact counterpart of a large Jersey tomato, and, singular to say, is of a bright red color. In other respects she is quite handsome, possessing beautiful dark hair and eyes, and a very comely, well developed nose. Her red, terribly misshapen nose, standing out prominently among its pretty surrounding features, and above an especially lovely mouth, gives the young girl a most unique appearance. And she certainly would be a fortune to the average American showman. Once seen she will never be forgotten. This awful affliction has made the young lady exceedingly sensitive, and she seldom goes out of doors. The neighbors, however, have had occasional glimpses of her, and she is now the talk of the ward in Philadelphia in which she resides.

"Yes," the old lady replied, in answer to natural inquiries, "my Jane was born in September, and we then lived on a tomato farm in Jersey. We had a little canning establishment on our place, and all that season we did nothing but can and can tomatoes. I peeled and peeled, and cut and cut tomatoes till I was just sick of the sight of them red things. We were poor, and my old man and I did the most of the work. He'd do the sealing of the cans, and I'd do the preparing of the tomatoes. Then, toward the latter part of the summer, a big bushel basket of tomatoes fell down on me off of a shelf where we used to stack them, and nearly scared me to death. When in Iowa, entirely inexperienced in the ways of the dreadful life in which she embarked, and took up her residence at Lizze Allen's bargin, on Congress street. By her own lady-like demeanor she won the good opinion of many men, among whom was Gov. Tabor. A woman who lived in the house with her at the time she won the governor's favor says that the western millionaire was thoroughly captivated by the woman; that he was with her almost constantly, and that he gave her money without stint. She finally left her for the sake of his advice, and has never returned. None of the persons of whom an account of the woman's career was solicited spoke ill of her, a thing most remarkable among them. She was thoroughly temperate, and by industry and frugality accumulated over $500, which went along with many thousands when the Bee-Hive Savings bank took its upward flight. There is no doubt among those who know the woman here that she was once the governor's favorite, and that had she not become intemperate she would have continued to hold the same position in his opinion.

A Significant Fact. The cheapest medicine in use is THOMAS' ELECTRIC OIL, because so little of it is required to effect a cure. For croup, diphtheria, disease of the lungs and throat, whether used for bathing the chest or throat, for taking internally or inhaling, it is a matchless compound. 28-d1w

Wealth in the Senate. Portland Argus. The present senate contains at least a score of senators not one of whom is worth less than $200,000. The richest man is, of course, Fair, of Nevada, who probably possesses as much as all the other senators together. Next to him is David Davis, of Illinois, a widower, who is reputed to be the possessor of millions. It is somewhat difficult to name the senator whose fortune ranks third in size, but if Eugene Hale, of Maine, has received the mantle of his father-in-law, Zach. Chandler, with its well-lined pockets, his fortune is nearly as large as that of David Davis. The wife of Senator Hale is the only daughter of the late Zach. Chandler. Other very wealthy senators are Morrill, of California; Mahone, of Virginia, and Sawyer, of Wisconsin, known to be worth more than $1,000,000 each. Sewell, of New Jersey, is a railroad man and is very wealthy. Senator John Sherman, of Ohio, it is said, is worth more than $2,500,000, his property consisting largely of real estate in Washington. Among other senators who write their fortunes with seven ligures are Cameron, of Pennsylvania; Canada, and Davis, of West Virginia; Brown, of Georgia, and Plum, of Kansas. Senators Hill, of Colorado; Gorman, of Maryland; McPherson, of New Jersey, and Pendleton, of Ohio, are all worth more than $500,000. Many other senators are comfortably fixed, possessing little hoards of from $50,000 to $500,000. Among those who have but little comparatively here below, that is, not more than $100,000 apiece, are Morrill, of Vermont; Anthony, of Rhode Island; Rollins, of New Hampshire; Jones, of Nevada; Saunders, of Nebraska, and Allison, of Iowa.

Jane was born we thought she had an awful funny red nose; but my old man said it was only because she was so young, and that it would straighten out and come all right as she grew older. But it never has," added the old lady, with a deep sigh. Jane has been examined by a number of celebrated physicians; but nothing can be done to improve the shape of her nose. It has been the unanimous opinion of the medical fraternity consulted that an operation would only make matters worse, and that the young lady would have to live and die as she was born.

"Yes," the old lady answered to further questioning, "when we lived in Newark one showman came all the way from Chicago. 'Western enterprise' he called his visit. He was a stuck-up creature. When he found I wouldn't let my daughter go for any amount he had the cheek to offer to marry my Jane if I then would consent to her being put on exhibition. He said by her husband he'd be in a position to protect her from public; something, he said, all public exhibition young women were greatly troubled with. Cheeky, wasn't he? A bright, peart little chap from Boston offered me $2,000 a year and all my expenses for myself and daughter. He actually talked religion to me, and gabbed about the Christian duty I owed my child; said that if the Lord in his goodness saw fit to make her that was it was my Christian duty to make all the money I could to use for her education, and such like things. Oh, he was a smooth talker. He had a Bible in his hand and a big hymn book sticking out of his pocket.

"Jane spends most of her time reading. She has not looked in the glass," the mother said, "for eight years; not since she was twelve years old. She got one look then one day, and never would look again. Seems to me it kind of makes her sick. But my she's fond of books, only she says it makes her feel so bad when she reads, about so many pretty girls; makes her think of herself. But my Jane had a blue once, and he went to marry her, too"—and the old lady's eyes gleamed with pride. "But I wouldn't allow J 'No, Jane, I said, 'we don't want any more tomato-nosed children in the family. It's bad enough for me to have a daughter that way, let alone a heir' in a grandchild. That would break my heart, sure." Then when the young man found I was firm and he couldn't get my daughter, he went away and married the reddest-headed girl he could find. Seems to me he liked the color of red."
