VENNER'S PREDICTIONS.

The General Outlook Improving. From Advanced Frost of 7c. The general outlook for the weather of the summer season in southern and southwestern sections is improving, owing to the continuance of very windy weather in northern and western sections of Canada and the United States. But a "windy spring makes a severe autumn" therefore the outlook for the autumn of 1892 is increasing in severity. My theory of "weather relationships" is working just now in a telling manner all over the northern hemisphere, and I feel much greater confidence in predicting the periods of the more marked disturbances. Hence, I herewith reiterate my previous statements respecting "a very cold and stormy autumn" and early setting in of extreme severity, with heavy snowfalls, this reaching to remote southern points. We are likely to experience one of the coldest periods in a long term of years during the early part of the winter of 1892-93, but the cold will come in a lump, and the latter part of the winter is likely to be mild and open, with an advanced spring. H. G. VESSOR, Editor of Venner's Bulletin. KING KALAKAUA.

The Splendor of His Palace Just Completed at Honolulu. Thirty-five years ago, on a gently rising knoll, about one mile back from the sea line, King Kamehameha erected in the city of Honolulu a royal palace of unpretentious dimensions, which served as the building of state until the accession of Kalakaua. In the spring of 1874 the new king conceived the idea of building a new palace, and immediately upon his arrival in this country he set about, assisted by his high chamberlain, Col. Judd, for the purpose of securing plans and estimates for his proposed new domicile. Boston was searched for an architect who could give the king a satisfactory drawing of what he required. After this had been found, instructions were given to have the old palace razed and a new one erected in its stead. An Englishman had been engaged to put up the building, but with the proverbial pugnacity of his kind, he attempted to force his ideas upon the king against his wish, the result being the withdrawal of John Bull and the substitution in his place of Mr. G. S. Wilder, then minister of the interior, who successfully carried the work to its completion. As was mentioned above, the new palace is erected on the site of the old building. It is two stories high, with English basement, and the material used is brick and concrete, and the former had been imported from San Francisco and the latter from Portland, Oregon. Native and Chinese labor had been employed on the building, but with poor success, and not until a force of American artisans had been sent out did the structure begin to assume its architectural proportions. Viewed from a distance, the building presents a light and graceful appearance, with its four bastions, on either broad verandas, pillars and towers. The verandas extend completely around the palace and are supported by massive columns, the shafts of which are of brick surmounted by Corinthian capitals of stone, the entablatures and bases being of wood. At the corners of the verandas boudoirs have been built, which are furnished as our seaside cottages, and will be used by guests who desire a cool and refreshing siesta. The palace is approached by a wide flight of stairs that leads directly into the main corridors on the first floor. On the right of the corridor approaching from the north is the grand reception or throne room, which is 68 feet long and 40 feet wide. Here all diplomatic interviews will be held, and other matters of state attended to. Beyond and next to the grand reception room is the dining room, 46 feet long and 32 feet wide. On the left of the corridor are the grand chamberlain's room, the king's spare room, the room for servants, billiard, china, and card rooms, wine and beer vaults, and a kitchen. On the right of the upper corridor is the king's bedroom, 36 feet long and 25.6 feet wide. On this floor are also located the library, music, dressing, bath, and a number of ante-rooms. On the left of the hall is the queen's room, a duplicate of the king's apartment. There are also three bathrooms, a number of them for guests, and a few small ante-rooms. A marble staircase, 19 feet wide, leads from the lower floor to the second-story hall. In each of the corridors four massive chandeliers are to be suspended. These will be of highly burnished brass, bearing facsimiles of the king's crown, and also his monogram, wrought in artistic designs. Glass pendants, elaborately cut, will be hung in profusion about the delicately interlaid and glittering metal. The grand reception or throne room will be decorated in red and gold. At its northern extremity is a dais about twelve inches high, and here will be located two throne chairs. They are gothic in style, beautifully carved, and the woodwork heavily laid in gold, of two prettily-contrasting shades. The upholstery is in red silk brocade. There will be twelve other chairs in this room, similarly styled and upholstered as the throne chairs, but of much smaller dimensions. Over the dais, supported by a burnished rod, will be a canopy of red brocade, ornamented with massive fringe of the same shade. In the middle of this room will be placed a large circular sofa, covered with satin brocade. The center pin of this will be surmounted by a beautiful china vase with flowers. The windows will be draped in heavy red brocade, with bars and rings. The cornice are elaborately curved, very deep, completely gilded, and each surmounted by a crown and two spears. Against the walls three massive pier mirrors will be placed—their dimensions being 12x6 feet, the frames of which are rich in carving and gold. The audience room will be tastefully though not as elaborately furnished as the throne-room. The sofas and chairs are of highly polished and artistically-carved walnut, upholstered in blue embossed mohair plush of a delicate tint. Heavy fringe of the same shade is used as trimming. The same shade will be hung in the same material as the upholstery, and the curtains from brass rings. In this room
