Betty sighed. Now why she should have sighed at this particular moment no one on earth could tell. And it was all the more exasperating because John had just generously put into her little shapely hand a brand-new $10 bill. And here began the trouble.
"What's the matter?" he said, his face falling at the faint sound and his mouth clapping together in what those who knew him but little called an second and walk.

"And if you think, John Peabody, that I'll stand and have such things said to me, you miss your guess—that's all!" cried Betty, with two big red spots coming in her cheeks as she tried to draw her little erect figure up to its utmost dimensions. "Forever insinuating! I guess you if this wouldn't have said that before I married you. Oh, 'now you can, of

"Oh, yes, there is," said Betty, still in the cool, calm way that ought not to have decided him. But men know so little of women's hearts, although they may live with them for years in cloiest friendship. "You needn't try to endure it, John Peabody, if you don't want to. I'm sure I don't what have I said? Oh, John, John!" The bird twittered in his little cage over in the window among the plants. Betty remembered like a flash how John and she filled the seed-cap that very morning, how he laughed when she tried to put it in between the bars and when she couldn't reach without getting upon a chair he took her in his great arms and held her up, just like a child, that she might fix it to suit herself. And the "bits" that he said in his tender way, they had gone down to the depths of her foolish little heart, sending her about her day's work singing for very gladness of spirit.

Betty stuffed her fingers hard into her rose ears to shut out the bird's chirping.

"If he only knew why I sighed," she moaned. "Oh, my husband!
Birthdays—nothing will make any difference now. Oh, why can't I die!"
How long she stayed there, crouched down on the old sofa, she never knew.

With all her distress of mind she was saved from opening her mouth. So Miss Simmens, failing in that, was forced to go on.
