LYNCH LAW IN COLORADO.

How a Prayer Meeting Wound up With a Double Hanging. "I don't think the frontier ever witnessed a lynching so bold as that of Betts and Browning," said Mr. Hickman, the receiver of the land office at Lake City, to a Tribune reporter the other day. "You will remember the cause. Sheriff Campbell attempted to arrest the two men, you know, while they were in the act of stealing some furniture from a house. He was shot and killed instantly - an assistant who was with him indentifying the faces of the murderers by the light of a match which was struck when the demand for surrender was made. The murder was committed on the 26th of last month, the day we were to have celebrated the Odd Fellows' anniversary. The sheriff was the founder of our lodge, and instead of a celebration we had a funeral. A better fellow than Campbell never lived. The murderers were the keepers of a dance-hall. They were arrested that morning and put in jail. Campbell's two brothers, who were mining at Pitkin, eighty-five miles away, were telegraphed to come to Lake City to attend the funeral. That afternoon, the 27th, in a rumor was circulated in the street, that there would be a prayer-meeting at the house of the dead sheriff at 11 o'clock. I had not the slightest suspicion of the intention, and was among the 100 men or more who congregated near the premises. I was not there long before I had learned the purpose of the advertisement, and was not slow in washing my hands of the affair. The men had met to lynch the murderers. The plan was given out boldly, and as boldly executed, as the next day, when I arose, the information I received before. I had reached the breakfast table, was the lifeless bodies of the two men were hanging from the cross beam of the Gunnison river bridge, below the city. "Did you hear how the vigilantes proceeded?" "From the gossip which was circulated after the excitement and precaution had died out, I believe that at least 100 men were in the lynching party. I will tell you the occurrence as I framed it from mixed reports. From the 'prayer-meeting' the vigilantes went to the jail. The guards, apparently, offered no resistance, and Betts and Browning were taken out. The hands were first bound to their sides. Some of the representative church members of the community are said to have been in the throng who demanded the 'eye for an eye' and 'the tooth for a tooth.' I do not know how true that was. Well, while the men were being bound, one of them asked if there was not a friend in the crowd. A young gambler who had been a frequenter of the dance hall, and a friend to the doomed men, shouted that he was a friend, and made a break toward the prisoners. Somebody placed the cold muzzle of a pistol against the side of his head and told him to skip the town instantly. I believe that the incident was a true bill, because the courageous youth was not seen in the city until a week later. Everything was done quietly, dispassionately. The two men were marched down the Gunnison road after midnight. Neither of them weakened; even when the bridge was reached and the cruel nooses were placed about their necks. As effort was made to save Browning, many insisted that he did not fire the fatal shot, and should not be lynched for complicity in the murder. Browning would have been turned loose, had it not been for the fact that he said he would be revenged upon the witness of the murder. When he made this threat he was deemed a better man dead than alive, as everybody knew that, although a quiet man, he was desperate. Just as the hanging was being ended, and I understand it, while the ropes were being arranged for the pulling, the two Campbell brothers arrived at the scene, having rode the eighty-five miles by buckboard and in the saddle that day. The murderers were asked if they had aught to say, and both coolly replied that they had not. They were hanged to a beam which crosses above from truss to truss of the bridge. The bodies were allowed to dangle there until late in the day. They were planted, however, before the remains of the sheriff were interred. "Was there any indignation expressed against the lynching?" "Not the least. On the contrary, the people all thought a very good one, and all that could be heard in the way of comment indicated a feeling of relief and satisfaction. "I Don't Want That Stuff." Is what a lady of Boston said to her husband when he brought home some medicine to cure her of sick headache and neuralgia which had made her miserable for fourteen years. At the first attack, therefore, it was administered to her with such good results, that she continued its use until cured, and made so enthusiastic in its praise, that she induced twenty-two of the best families in her circle to adopt it as their regular family medicine. That "stuff" is Hop Bitters. [Standard of Breeding for Marks. We are making many serious mistakes in breeding by adhering too rigidly to color marks. Numerous instances have occurred in which many valuable strains of blood have been ruined by overlooking prime qualities and characteristics in order to keep close to the color line. This applies to horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, and even poultry. It is well enough to have certain defined shapes and types as badges of purity of descent, but when these marks or points are gained at a sacrifice of stamina, quality and endurance it is time to halt for consideration. The contest that has been waged over the roan or red color of the shorthorns has been an injury to that variety of cattle. So prejudiced has been the competition in this matter that the very object of their improvement has been often forgotten, and at some fairs the judges have spent hours in considering points of color and minutes only in deciding questions of shape. That the shape and general make-up of the animal should be paramount to all other considerations is apparent to every one who wishes to breed cattle on the farm for the market and with profit, but we are learning costly lessons in our eagerness for color-marks only.
