It is still in good condition.

-A new lodge of railway conductors has been organized in Wisconsin to be known as the "E. L. Thurber Lodge No. 63, Iowa and Minnesota division of the C. M. & St. P., or of railway conductors." -Mr. Pease, the engineer, secured a few days ago, the services of Mr. Barke, the photographer, to take some views of the government work being done in improving the river. Some very interesting views were taken near Florence, and one of them is remarkable, as the profile of one rock stands forth so like a human face as to be almost startling, the features being very closely those of an old man with a hat on. These views are to be forwarded to Washington, and made a part of the report, and they surely are so excellent.

ings of photographic art as to bear comparison with any to be found with any similar reports. The views were taken by the instantaneous gelatine process, which Mr. Barke was the first to introduce here, and which has given him much credit. He uses this process in his gallery work also, and has lately put in some very fine accessories in the way of set pieces, by which he can make eight different combinations, representing balcony, verandah, and other scenes.

-On Saturday Justice Abbott tied the knot which made Frank Ellis and Julia M. Baird husband and wife. Both parties were from Atchison, Kas., and their intention was to get married there. They had procured their railway tickets for Omaha, and then tried to find the county judge to get a license. They were unable to get one in time and so took their wedding trip and had the ceremony performed here, reversing the usual order.

A Model Livery Stable.

Yesterday in his wanderings a Bee reporter dropped into a Main street livery stable and was saluted with a friendly greeting from its proprietors, Messrs. Holland & Miller. For years one of the pressing wants of that section of the city has been a first-class livery stable and this want has been finally supplied by these gentlemen. They have erected a new building for their business, affording ample carriage room and stabling for about thirty horses. The livery department has been enlarged and great improvements made in the class of stock, new buggies and harness procured. The use of ponies in the business has been discarded and a stable full of nice sized horses and good roadsters substituted in their stead. The stable is well supplied with elegant and easy riding single and double buggies, and the harness are all new. Two good hostlers are constantly employed in the barn, and day or night are ready to wait on patrons in a gentlemanly manner and attend to their wants promptly.

In addition to the livery department Messrs. Holland & Miller conduct a sale and feed stable. They have a neat and comfortable barn where horses will be well taken care of and will be protected from the rain and sun and get an honest feed at a reasonable price. They will be pleased to meet customers at their barn on Lower Main street at any time and will give them every accommodation in their line and charge only a reasonable rate. The best of attention will at all times be given boarding stock, and parties owning "flyers" can have them taken such care of as will insure their always being in good condition, while family animals will receive the best attention.

WAYS OF THE WICKED.

A Lively Time With a Discharged Employee of the Ogdin House-Other Doings of Interest to the Police.

For about three weeks past there has been a young man employed at the Ogdin House by the name of Scott, who came here from Denver, where it is said he had a lively row, in which he cracked one policeman's skull, and broke the arm of another. The fellow was discharged Saturday from the employ of the Ogdin House, and yet insisted on hanging about there, so yesterday an officer was sent for to take him away. Officer Morse on going to the house found Scott in bed, and on rousing him up told him to leave. He showed fight, and when the officer got his man in the rear of the hotel there was a regular set to. Officer Morse tumbled into a hole while in the struggle, but rallied and thumped the young man's head, and succeeded in starting for the station, when Chief Field came to the front and assisted. On the way thither the two had another lively scuffle with the prisoner but succeeded in locking him up.

"Texas" the well-known darkey was on a loud drunk in rotten row, and was led in by Chief Fields and Officer Sterling.

Officer Sterling was arrested a shoemaker named Wilson, who was so drunk that he kept the calaboose lively for an hour or more after being locked up.

Morse picked up another drunk who registered himself as Robinson Crusoe.

Richard Stack was so wildly drunk yesterday that it took two officers to shut him up.

A lively little row is reported as having occurred in Stella Long's house Saturday night, in which one of the girls who was not taking an active part got hit on the head with a beer glass giving a scalp wound. No arrests.

SHOOTING STYLES.

The Particars of the Tragedy as Told By the Witnesses.

Van Mason Discharged on the Ground That the Shooting Was Justifiable.

The Sympathy of the Community Evidently With the Shooter.

The killing of Styles at the Transfer on Friday night has been a theme of constant talk here, and the details have been discussed freely and fully. On all sides are heard expressions of regret that a human life has thus been taken, but at the same time very free sympathy with Van Mason who did the shooting, and who is himself lying at the Pacific House suffering from the severe injury which he received at the hands of the man whom he killed.

The examination took place Saturday morning before Judge Aylesworth. There were several witnesses being held here, and as detention for any length of time would cause them serious inconvenience, it was deemed best to get their statements, and to learn where they could be found in case they should ever be needed again. The defendant was too ill to be present in court, but he was represented by his attorney D. B. Daley, while the state was represented by C. R. Scott. A short hand reporter was employed to take the evidence verbatim, and a large crowd gathered outside the rail to hear what each of the eye-witnesses to the tragedy had to say.

T. D. Brown, of Oakland, Cal., was the first witness. He had come in over the Northwestern road Friday evening. Early in the evening he was sitting on the porch outside the Emigrant house reading, when he heard a dispute going on outside the house about checking some baggage. He soon saw Van Mason coming rushing out of the door and Styles following him, shoving him and hitting him on the head and shoulders. They had reached nearly the edge of the broad platform when Van Mason, dropping his valise and overcoat, turned and struck at Styles, but only a glancing blow. He struck again and that time knocked Styles down. Styles gathered himself up and went into the house, and Van Mason took up his baggage and went toward the depot on a sharp walk. Styles came on with the large iron poker and followed after him. The witness did not know what occurred at the depot except that he heard two shots fired.

J. A. Brown, of Mount Vernon, Iowa, was the next witness. He had arrived on the Northwestern train Friday afternoon. He was walking down toward the Emigrant house when the man who was with him remarked there was a fight down there. As he looked down he saw Van Mason knock Styles down, but could not see what Styles was doing. He met Van Mason about half way down and asked him what the trouble was. He replied that he could get no satisfaction about his baggage, and he had given the fellow all he wanted he guessed. A little further along the witness met Styles with the iron bar in his hand, walking along toward the depot after Van Mason. The latter was ahead of him and going at a good fair walk. The witness did not see the row at the depot except the flash of the revolver, and heard the two shots.

W. B. Carpenter, of Marian, Iowa, a farmer and cattle dealer, who had arrived on the same train as the preceding witness, was walking from the depot to the Emigrant house, and was about half way when he saw a fuss at the Emigrant house and Styles showing Van Mason out of the house and following him up. He saw Van Mason turn about and strike twice, knocking Styles. Van Mason then picked up his valise and started off. Styles, after going into the house, came out with the iron poker and followed him down, and the witness, turning about, followed after them. He heard Van Mason call to some one to stop Styles, and heard Van Mason tell Styles not to come any further or he would shoot. Styles rushed right onto him, and as they came close together, the witness saw the flash of the revolver. They clinched and went down. Van Mason had been walking very fast. Witness did not see anybody try to stop Styles. He thought they clinched between the first and second shot, and both fell together. After Van Mason called on Styles to stop following him, Styles did not stop, but came right on. The witness saw Styles lift the poker as they came together, and saw the blow come down. The blow and the first shot were close together. When Van Mason called for some one to stop Styles following him, he said: "Stop that man; he is after me and will kill me." The witness thought Van Mason said this to a man with a crippled foot, who is an emigrant agent. Styles was thirty or forty feet behind Van Mason when the latter said this.

John Norman, special policeman of the Union Pacific for about two years, next testified. He was standing in the ladies' sitting room, looking after passengers for the Kansas City train, when he heard the first shot. He started for the door as he heard another shot. He saw the crowd, and when he got there Styles and Mason were both down. He saw Styles had a revolver in his hand. John Quinn, the baggage man, had hold of Styles' hand, and I grabbed the other, while some one took the revolver away. The witness asked who was who, Styles replied that he was, and that the other man had shot him. The witness took Van Mason in charge. He did not see Van Mason have anything, and did not search him. He took the prisoner to the north side of the depot, and had the blood washed off his head. The revolver in Styles' hand was the one Van Mason used to do the shooting, and witness understood that Styles had wrested it out of Van Mason's hand in the struggle. Al Keller was holding Van Mason down when witness reached the spot. Keller works for Markel & Swobe.

Styles also worked for them. Swobe was also there. William Dudley, of Palmyra, Mo., was also sworn. He stated that he was a deputy sheriff. He saw Van Mason coming from the emigrant building, and just as he reached the turn in the platform by the depot, he spoke to the emigrant agent, and told him to stop the man who was following him. The witness also heard him warn Styles not to follow him. When Styles was close onto him Van Mason turned and kept backing away, and as Styles came on he fired the first shot. Styles was raising the poker, and was about six feet from Van Mason. Styles seemed very angry, and was making an effort to get at Mason. The second shot followed quickly.

C. D. Eaton was called, but before he could testify Mr. Scott in behalf of the state moved that the prisoner be discharged, saying that Van Mason, in his opinion, did just right, and that the man's pardon ought to be asked for delaying him here for an examination even. At this the crowd cheered lustily. Dr. McKune was called to the stand, and testified as to Van Mason's condition, he having attended him. The doctor described the wound as on the top and back of the head, almost exactly in the center, it being about two and a half to three inches in length, and cut clear through the skull. There was also a wound over the left eye, and the throat was swollen as though it had been choked. Van Mason also complained of bruises and sore spots. The blow fell where the skull was the strongest, and he should have expected that such a blow as this would fell an ox. It was hard to tell what the result of Van Mason's wound would be. He considered it a very serious wound at least. Judge Aylesworth stated that from the testimony it appeared that Van Mason was justifiable in shooting and discharging his pistol, a conclusion which seems to be heartily approved by the citizens here, even among those who realize that the taking of any human life is a sad and serious matter. Van Mason seemed to be a little better yesterday, but is by no means in condition so that his recovery can be assured.

Withdrawn from the Race. HARLAN, Iowa, June 9, 1882. Hon. George F. Wright, Chairman Committee Sixth District, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

MY DEAR SIR:-Feeling that a further contest on my part would only result in complications at the coming congressional convention, and in order to promote harmony in said convention and secure a more complete triumph for the republican ticket in the Ninth congressional district, I hereby decline to be a candidate, and I desire that my name shall not be presented to the convention. I hereby tender to my many friends in the district my grateful thanks for the support they have given me in my candidacy, and I shall ever have a kind, reciprocal feeling toward them for the interest manifested in my behalf. PLATT WICKS.

In commenting upon the withdrawal, or perchance a part of the consideration promised by Anderson and his organ, the organ devotes considerable space to lauding Mr. Wicks action as an expression of wonderful loyalty to the best interests of the party, and "a sacrifice of personal ambition upon the altar of principle." A short time ago another candidate withdrew in a like manner, but the organ failed to devote any such praise at that time and upon that man.
