Adventures in Lake Ontario by the Syracuse Female Aeronaut. The following account of the experience of Mile. Adele, the Syracuse aeronaut, who made a balloon ascension from Oswego on the Fourth and dropped into the lake, is given by the Oswego Times: After the balloon rose it tended northwest and began to approach the lake. I threw out a into a different current which would ake the balloon away from the lake, but it still continued to work northward, and when over the west breakwater I cut off the anchor-rope, and it presented a curious sight as it fell. The water below looked nearly black, and I knew I had attained a great elevation and was still rising. Shortly after the balloon was enveloped in a heavy snow-storm, and for a few moments I could see nothing but the white snowflakes beneath me. The snow melted on the balloon and filled snow melted on the balloon and filled stores, do, there's a darling!" tional weight caused it to settle somered signal flag, and fastened on my cork jacket and saw the sail boats, but could not tell which was the life boat. What Improved Machinery Has Not Done. We might enumerate at great length the benefit derived from improved machinery and then, perhaps fail in doing the subject justice, but for the moment let us consider the other side of the question. It is easy to suppose that with improved machinery and the increased facilities of the present over the past that a larger average yield of wheat and other cereals would have resulted. But facts go to show that the rate of yield has fallen off, not a little, but considerable during the last balf control and first-class beds. Terms very reasonable. half century, and the increased facilities for cultivation has resulted in impoverishing the soil. Of course the yield has not been increased full benefit of our present facilities less acres will have to be sown to cereals, more attention paid to the production of the grasses. It a general change is not made our rapid working labor saving machinery will prove detriment rather than a benefit to th agricultural interest. We have faith that farmers will yet raise their usual crop of wheat from half the number of acres that are now rapidly skimmed over, and when such times arrive farms will be valued more by the productiveness per acre than by the num ber of acres cropped and the old-time thirty bushels per acre will succeed the modern fifteen.
