A very exciting though ludicrous sensation occurred on 13th street opposite Hellman's block about 1:30 p. m. yesterday, which drew a crowd of two or three thousand to the spot. The leading actors were Jas. Gorgan, an Irishman who had taken too many drops of "mountain dew", and Lo Hii Yung, a Chinese laundryman, whose wash house is on Harney street near Twelfth. A deep ditch has been dug at the entrance of the alley along side of Martin Kennedy's saloon, and the Chinaman, who was passing by, stopped a moment to look into the mysterious depths. He was suddenly startled by a splash from behind which nearly landed him at the bottom of the pit, but he saved himself by an agile leap which brought him to terra firma on the opposite side. His assailant not satisfied with the result of his little joke went up the alley and got a couple of stones or bricks with which he followed John around the corner toward Farnam street, and firing one at his retreating form hit him in the back of the head and knocked him down. This was too much for the Mongolian blood and Lo Hii Yung whipped out a murderous looking knife, and stood at bay for a moment and then was about to assume the offensive and carve up his assailant, when Mr. Tallon sprang between them at the risk of his own life and separated them. The half "paralyzed" man who had started the affray was hustled out of sight, through Hellman's back way, and was soon escorted to jail by Officer Gorman. Yung left the scene of the encounter on a dead run, swearing vengeance, and returned in a moment with a huge derringer, the muzzle of which was up his sleeve, and the butt decidedly conspicuous as it rested in the palm of his hand. On arriving at the opposite of the street from the assembled crowd, he howled out a fierce challenge to his adversary to come forth, and with a volley of thoroughly American oaths and epithets offered to kill him on sight. As there was no response John crossed the street and eagerly scanned the crowd for a sign of the fellow he had no doubt made up his mind to kill, but of course did not see him. When warned that he would be pulled by the police if he did not look out, he expressed a contempt for the police or jail, and said he didn't care; all he wanted was to kill his man.

Officers Jacobsen and Donahoe appeared on the scene finally, and John forgot his dignity and took to his heels, making a bee line for home followed by the whole crowd of men and boys. The officers were there in an instant after, but the heathen, with the deftness peculiar to his race, hid the revolver so that all search failed to discover any deadly weapon, while the proprietor of the house looked utterly surprised that he should be suspected of even knowing of the existing of such a thing. Failing to find the pistol or knife, they took the Chinaman himself to jail, surrounded by a genuine Omaha street mob. John wore an air of stolid indifference which he kept up after his arrival at the jailer's office. On being searched nothing was found but a complete assortment of wash tickets, buttons and similar articles necessary to the trade.

The sympathy of the crowd was apparently with Lo Hii Yung, and no one was heard to find fault with his righteous indignation, while it was true that Gorgan assaulted him when in a condition that made him scarcely responsible for what he did. All admitted that but for Mr. Tallon's timely and plucky interference a bloody murder would have been committed then and there.
