

HONEY FOR THE LADIES.

Embroidered crepe is among the novelties for mourning dresses. Pink cambric dresses trimmed with lace are very fashionable.

New French capote bouquets are covered with white elder blossoms. Clara Jane says she does not like it.

False hair comes from Asia, and is boiled in an acid to suit the northern complexion.

Clusters of large strawberries on a cream ground is one of the latest designs for painted muslin.

A man at Des Moines kissed his hired girl by mistake and had to pay $800 to settle it.

Long, pointed finger nails are fashionable among women, but they will never be popular with married men.

Almond-tinted cashmere, adorned with embroidered red carnations and orange daisies, forms one of a number of elegant French gowns just imported.

Chateaux bags are again very generally worn, often hanging from the arm, from which they are suspended by a colored ribbon tied in a bow.

A Philadelphia girl has disheveled four young men with a croquet mallet this season, and hasn't really got down to business yet.

An Indiana woman has taken the job of counting all the kernels of wheat in a bushel, and as soon as she has finished it she is to have a new calico dress and a diamond ring.

The female rival of Tanner in Wash., Ind., has now fasted for sixty-eight days, and is in a very weak state.

An Iowa editor advertised live pads to the amount of $250 and took it all in pads. Then he was back because his hired girl wouldn't take a cent of them for two months' services.

Large square neckerchiefs of fine silk muslin, wrought in delicate sprays of apple and trailing vines of honeysuckle blossoms, are worn over sprigged or white muslin dresses with charming effect.

The long, gracefully-draped negligee, buttoned to the throat with frogs and silks, and partially covered by a transparent breathers over a skirt of contrasting material, is a favorite style in the formation of traveling dresses of the very latest importation.

The most becoming and elegant headdress for full dress occasions or for church wear this autumn season are the airy little princess bonnets covered completely with white or tinted tulle, and fastened under the chin with lace ribbons or pearl strings.

Many of these little cap bonnets have the small delicate blossoms partly veiled with cascading blonde tulle.

India or French muslin in sprigged designs are again being worn by youthful women. A prettier fashion never existed; a fine muslin, gracefully made and lacustrimmed, with a lace border worn over the bonnet, and lighted here and there by knots of ribbon, gives a lady a really more attractive appearance than all the heavy velvets and brocades can ever do.

The pretty Arabian peasant's hat is very much worn by young girls. Sometimes the flat, velvet-lined brim is caught up lightly on one side, but it is generally worn in genuine peasant style, and the wreaths of flowers on the outside are made to match the color of the linings.

A sweet little hat in this style is of dark green satin, faced with pale pink tulle, and trimmed outside with a wreath of pink oleander blossoms caught together at the back with a bow and long ends of dark green satin ribbon.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

One hundred and eighty-one applicants for admission to the Freshman class at Harvard have passed the examination.

Of the fifteen members of the Chicago school board ten are foreign born, six are Roman Catholics, and eleven are deacons.

The increasing number of technical schools in England marks the decline of the apprenticeship system.

One of the schools has just been created at Bradford, and another will shortly be created at Bradford at a cost of $200,000.

The elective system has just been adopted by the university of South Carolina. The institution will furnish two literary and three scientific courses, together with special courses in agriculture, mechanics and surveying, and partly in English studies.

It will also presently arrange a normal course for teachers.

The lectures on ancient history, on Greek literature and on English history are now thrown open to female students at Oxford. And the skies have not fallen.

Those who think that it would not harm Columbia college to follow Oxford's example must reflect that an ancient and magnificent university can afford to be just.

At the meeting last week of the Penn.

sylvania teachers was heard the ever-encouraging demand for more thorough teaching in the primary schools.

One speaker earnestly protested against the practice of putting in the charge of the schools, while another declared that the best teaching does not always mean that given by the most learned persons, but that which best gathers up the most punctuality, energy, enthusiasm, etc., and whatever gives efficiency in the school room.

A cheerful view of the education of the future is given by the Boston Advertiser. "The object-teaching," it says, "which is becoming a feature of some schools, the familiarity with things and ideas rather than with their abstract conventional rules, which is taught, will have an effect upon the mental habits of one's entire life. In the coming generation, as a result of this new system of education, we may expect a more lively spirit of inquiry and public discussion, a keener perception of what is broad and solid, a less reliance upon mere words which do not clothe ideas, a decreased demand for glibness in generalities, and a quicker perception of the value of plain, any subject, or doctrine, whether it relate to popular government, social science or household economy."

A committee of the Wisconsin State Teachers' Association has recommended that the common school savings banks, at the present meeting of the association.
