Aprons of fig leaves could have been sold at a premium in that vicinity about then. At that moment they heard the runaway horses walk across the bridge by the mill, which is at a half a mile from where they were a serious problem, would they, with the team a half mile from the start and only one mile farther to go, overtake them before they should reach the town. It was the only hope, and both struck out at their best speed. Fast time has been made by the professional runners of ancient and modern times, but their time was a small price as compared with the fleetness of these two youths who, clothed in innocence only, ran with nerve equal to their desperate circumstances. The hot sun streamed down upon their unprotected backs and attacked them with its fiercest rays. On they rushed unimpeded of all except the great sun, and in a few moments they were still some distance away. The prairie dogs forgot to bark and plunged into their underground abodes, jack rabbits leaped aside and made for the nearest place of safety, birds of all kinds took to wing, all animal life was paralyzed with fear as the two runners dashed over the prairie, throwing up clouds of dust in their mad career. Hicks made a spur at the end of the race and overtook the team and sprang into the wagon just as they reached the suburbs of Beaver City. Seeing a carriage approaching he turned the horses about and started in the opposite direction intending to improve his toilet as soon as he could get farther from the town. He had only gone a short distance when he met a gentleman and two ladies, there was a wire fence on both sides, there was no turning out, it had to be met. Buck had by this time come up and as he is very large was mistaken by the astonished beholders as a veritable "white elephant." The boys survived and are now of the opinion that when they go in bathing the next time, they will leave their clothes on the ground. When the Beavers first heard the story they laughed so loudly that the people in Arapahoe, fifteen miles away, heard it, and prepared for action, thinking they heard the war whoops of hostile Indians.

Washington, Ohio, June 17, 1881. Dr. B. J. Kendall, &amp; Co., Gentlemen:—Reading your advertisement in Turf, Field and Farm, of your Kendall's Spavin Cure, I had a valuable and speedy horse which had been lame from spavin for eighteen months. I sent you for a bottle by express, which I six weeks removed all lameness and enlargement and a large reward from another horse, and both horses are now as sound as coins. The one bottle was worth to me one hundred dollars. Respectfully yours, H. A. B. STOKLEY, M. D.
