Spec'al Dispatches to THE BEE.

FINANCIAL.

NEW YORK, August 8.

MONEY.

Money—2@3 per cent.

Prime Mercantile Paper—5@6 per cent.

Sterling Exchange—Bankers' bills were steady, 4.85½; demand, 4.88½.

Produce exports for the week, $8,472,000.

The stock market at the close was strong, and there were indications that some of the leading speculators who have been working for a decline have given up the task as an unprofitable one and have joined the bull side.

The Evening Post says: "Ordinary speculative capitalists of Wall street can control prices, but it has often been shown that, as against the public, unless the latter can be demoralized, they are an inferior power, at least through early stages of a contest." The same paper says the secret of the strength of the market is the extensive buying of the public, which each year has more and more money to invest. The public now appear to be influenced in their purchases, mainly by two considerations: one, that even with a short yield in some crops here and there, the country, as a whole, will have the largest crops ever produced, and from the present indications will have a good market for them, and the other, that the trunk lines' policy this year is directed to securing full rates for freight, which is a year ago its purpose seemed to be the reverse. In other words, the public in buying shares in railroad property are counting on large tonnage and on good rates for the same.

The indications clearly point to another bull movement, leading operators having been large buyers on the recent decline. There is a considerable short interest in the market, a fact which will assist the rise materially. The strength of the Western Union was a feature of the dealing, stocks rising on the official announcement that Mr. Gould had transferred his large holding in the Mutual Union company at a very low figure, which prevents the possibility of warfare between the two corporations. The fact that the earnings of the Western Union are large, and also that Mr. Gould and his following were heavy buyers, assisted the upward movement this afternoon.
