A halt interest in the Dubuque Telegraph newspaper has been sold to City Treasurer Schunk for $4,000. This transfer is from a paper with democratic leanings to the hands of a conservative.

A dispatch from Pekin, the 5th, states Chinese authority intervened boldly in Corea and seized the father of the king and brought him to China. The king has been reinstated by Chinese troops and ships.

A disastrous fire occurred at Port-au-Prince August 11th, by which eighty-seven houses were destroyed, including the French consulate. Losses $300,000. One hundred and fifty families lost all their effects and are rendered homeless.

Mrs. Fanny Davenport, an American actress, appeared at Toole's theatre, London, Saturday night, as "Diana, Countess De Lur," in a new play adapted from the French by the author of "The Sign of the Cross." Mrs. Davenport was well received and called before the curtain. The audience was composed in great part of Americans.

J. G. Bigelow, counsel for Sergeant Mason, convicted for shooting at Giteaux, has received a letter from the secretary of war, declining to furnish him with a copy of the opinion of Judge Advocate General Swain on the case, for the reason that such reports are confidential in their nature.

Bigelow will probably endeavor to secure the release of Mason through a writ of habeas corpus this week.

Some time ago H. A. Coy, editor of The Oak Point Alert, a Chicago suburban paper, which has been circulating since 1885, disappeared, and it was supposed he had either absconded or was under hallucination. Saturday, however, his friends received a letter from him, stating he had been so threatened and terrified by the gamblers, led by the Hankins brothers, that after the third attack had been made on his life he had decided to leave town. He went to Philadelphia, where for a time his mind gave way and he had a fit of sickness, from which he is just recovering. His story is very curious, and he has letters to fortify it which he received from the gamblers while here.

Cheyenne Indians are reported still working north through Colorado and Kansas. There is no doubt they are returning to Pine Ridge agency, Dakota, Dr. McGillivray having offered them permission to do so, and having advised the Indian commissary to permit it. The Indians not being equipped for the journey there is every reason to believe that ravages and plagues will have their effect on the tribes of infantry at Fort Lyon have gone to intercept them as they attempt to cross the Arkansas river. One company of the Ninth cavalry is ordered from Fort Hays, and it is reported two companies of cavalry are following them from Fort Elliott and two companies are ordered from the Geronimo country. The soldiers intend to take the Indians back to the reservation. If they refuse it is not probable blood will be shed.

The Utah commission has made a report to the interior department. The report, after giving a detailed account of preparations necessary for an allotment of registration office a preparatory to the election of a delegate to the house of representatives of the United States, the first Tuesday in November 1892, states that they appointed a registrar in each county in the territory; also that a deputy assistant in each voting precinct in the territory will immediately be appointed. They have in their action been influenced by suggestions of leading citizens of Utah, rejecting all persons ineligible under the law. It is believed that the soldiers (Morones) will, under their recent equipment, be of great value in the future, and it is believed that the non-Morone element will cast a larger vote than ever before.

TEXAS CATTLE. Development of the Industry Since the War.

Galveston (Tex.) News. No business in Texas has developed more rapidly in the last few years, and none has paid in that time, and is paying now, a better dividend on the money invested than the rearing of cattle on the range.

Texas has been famed for its vast herds of cattle and its broad plains of nutritious grasses since its occupancy by the Anglo-Americans. But the time was, and not so far back in the past, when the cattle had but a nominal value. The beef that readily brings $30 or $40 to-day was bartered readily for the store account of a few dollars.

The remoteness of market and the hardships attending the business—the lack of a fixed monetary value and a market, and the privations of the ranchman's life—made cattle-raising a business on the plains of Texas, and capital passed it by with indifference. The increase was simply that of the cattle themselves, with a kind of reckless care on the part of owners, and no intention or thought of improving the breed or providing for the possibility of the future, which the old-time ranchmen never dreamed could affect the status of cattle-raising.

At the close of the war it is estimated that there were in Texas between 7,000,000 and 8,000,000 cattle, the enormous increase of the herds that had ranged without master or man during four years, like the wind, going where they pleased, and growing old and fat with few to molest and make them afraid. At this late date there was no market for cattle, and they had no certain or fixed value. About 1868 cattle began to find their way northward in scattered herds, and thus began the establishment of a market for Texas long-horns. One herd followed another, until in time the drive became a marked feature of the cattle business. But the opening of a new market did not obviate all the difficulties under which the ranchman of a few years ago labored. There was a prejudice against Texas cattle, that neither flesh, fat, nor cheapness seemed likely ever to overcome. While this prejudice militated against the sale of his produce, the long, tedious drive, beset by dangers and obstacles as it was, subtracted from the profits. Besides these drawbacks, the ranchman then, as now, was the frontman danger as well as privation. The ranchman was the sentinel on the outer wall the barrier between the hostile Redskins and the peaceful agriculturist. The soldier not only made the business extremely hazardous, but added to the expense, and thus lessened the profits to be gathered in the markets opened up by the drive. The Indian carried little for the cattle or the owner, but his covetous and murderous eye was ever upon the cow pasture without which the ranchman was helpless.

But while the Texas ranchman was rounding up his own as well as he might from the mixed millions of cattle that roamed our western prairies at the close of the war, there was an impulse and a movement to the north of him that was laying the foundation for a positive market for Texas long-horns, and giving to our cheap herds a value that, predicted from 1850 to 1864, would have been almost sufficient to send the prophet to the lunatic asylum. The opening and settlement of the northwestern states and territories made a market for Texas cattle, and the trail a famous feature of the business. Especially adapted to grazing purposes, thicker large numbers of long-horns were driven annually to graze and fatten upon the fine prairies of the northwest. This section being blessed with railroad facilities, western Texas became known on all the markets of the country. The driving of Texas cattle to be wintered in the north and prepared for market, became a special business in which many famous cattlemen amassed handsome fortunes. Not only were Texans driven north to be wintered before marketing, but thousands of herds of Texas cattle were driven northward to lay the foundation for the immense droves that now fill the northwestern prairies, and there is no state of that section that is not largely indebted to Texas for its cattle stocks.

Thus stood the business in 1873. Out on the frontier the Indian raids were to be resisted. It was no trifling question that to hear of the murder of some prominent cattlemen. Cow ponies were driven off and stocks scattered. The demand of the northwest had opened up a market to supply its vast plains, but the drive, too, was hazardous for most of the Indians on the trail, and many an unlucky drover in those days was forced to contribute freely to the red man's rapacity in property and blood, and still the price was low—totally inadequate to compensate the hazard and hardship of the ranchman's daily life.

In 1873 the advance of railroads, and which were pressed forward to the west, proved a harbinger of better days to the cattle raiser. Texas became connected by rail with all the great markets of the west—Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City—and, although the price was still low, owing mainly to the popular prejudice against Texas beef, the ranchman was enabled to realize in a few days instead of being compelled to wait for months, as formerly. With the railroads, and even in advance of them, came a steady flow of immigration and capital to possess the cheap and fertile lands of the Lone Star state. Activity was infused into the distant towns and neighborhoods. All classes were benefited by the new life that railroads gave the country, and none more so than the cattle-raiser. The demand for beef increased. The cattlemen were inspired with new hope and zeal. The marvelous increase of cattle began to give them value to new comers. More interest was felt by cattlemen because more value was attached to their property. Inoperative laws on the statute books were supplemented with wise and more liberal enactments. The Indians had been placed upon their reservation by the strong arm of the general government, and their forays and invasions were no longer to be dreaded.

As the years went by with slow advances in the value of the cattle, and hesitating efforts at improving the blood, it became apparent to a few progressive cattle raisers that a new era was dawning on the business, and that system and method were essential. Live stock associations were organized, and at once the rules and regulations adopted for their government. Their rules and regulations being for the protection of all and the common good, they were recognized and respected by all, rich and poor, high and low; and what the law of the land did not or could not do for themselves they accomplished for themselves and have maintained for themselves.

This order and harmony came out of the thorough organization of the cattlemen came the boom in prices. Capital no longer dreaded the loose and haphazard manner of conducting the business that had prevailed in the past. The marvelous dividends attracted many into the business, and with capital came constantly increasing prices. And once sought as an investment, the next step was to make the business permanent. The free range of the past is giving way to purchase and lease of grazing lands and water rights are held in high esteem.

Providence helps those who help themselves. The ranchman who clung to his cattle, despite Indian raids and low prices, is now reaping his reward. The introduction of capital into the grazing regions not only appreciated the value of stock, but the unusually heavy immigration from the Old World almost daily adds to the army of beef-eaters, while the narrowing circle of the range diminishes the supply. Beef-eaters are increasing more rapidly than beef-raisers.

The following prices will give some idea of the advance made in cattle prices, and justify the assertion made at the outset of this article: Before the war the average price of stock was from $5 to $6, and that of beef cattle from $12 to $15. During the war they had no fixed value from the fact that there was no regular market, and the currency of the country was variable and uncertain. From the close of the war until 1873 stock cattle brought from $7 to $8; beef cattle from $16 to $20. Now the same grades bring the following prices: Stock cattle, from $15 to $20, and beef cattle from $25 to $30, and the demand has increased in proportion, and we see no good reason why it should not continue to improve as long as population continues to increase, and beef constitutes one of the chief articles of our daily food.

There is much in store for the cattle business of Texas. The old-time prejudice against Texas beef has died out, and the salesman of years ago who "would not touch a Texas steer" now "makes a specialty of handling Texas stock." Great improvement has been made in the management and handling of cattle in Texas, and the grade is being improved constantly by the introduction of blooded bulls.

In fact there are many herds on the Texas range that will compare favorably with cattle anywhere. More care is taken in selecting cattle for the market, and the daily quotations from the big markets will tell how Texas beef is valued by the beef-eaters of the country. The Texas range offers an inviting field to all who want big dividends in the money market, for there is nothing in the state that pays a handomer return than cattle-raising.

THE DAD AND WORTHLESS. Are never imitated or counterfeited. This is especially true of a family medicine, and it is a positive proof that the remedy imitated is of the highest value. As soon as it had been tested and proved by the whole world that Hop Bitters was the purest, best and most valuable family medicine on earth, many imitations sprung up and began to steal the notices in which the press and people of the country had expressed the merits of H. B., and in every way trying to induce suffering invalids to use their stuff instead, expecting to make money on the credit and good name of H. B. Many others started up and began to use in similar style to H. B., with variously devised names in which the word "Hop" or "Hops" were used in a way to induce people to believe they were the same as Hop Bitters. All such pretended remedies or cures, no matter what their style or name is, and especially those with the word "Hop" or "Hops" in their name or in any way connected with them or their name, are imitations or counterfeits. Beware of them. Touch none of them. Use nothing but genuine Hop Bitters, with a bunch of clusters of green Hops on the wrapper label. Trust nothing else. Doctors and dentists are warned against dealing in imitations or counterfeits.

MARK THIS! Upon the condition of the least ailment, the liver and the bowels, depend physical health and cheerfulness of mind. If these organs are inactive or in a state of irritation, the long regulating influence of Tarrant's Seltzer Aperient is urgently required. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

KENDALL'S SPAVIN CURE. COL. L. T. FOSTER. Youngstown, Ohio, May 10, 1890. Dr. H. J. Kendall & Co. I have a very valuable illustration of a colt that I raised very highly. He had a large bone spavin on one joint and I had him under the charge of two veterinary surgeons which failed to cure him. I was one day reading the advertisement of Kendall's Spavin Cure in the Chicago Express I determined to try it and got out a couple of bottles. I took all and I thought I would give it a thorough trial. I used it a couple of days and the colt cured the colt cured to be lame and the pain has disappeared. I had but one bottle and the colt is now as free of spavin and as smooth as a baby's face in the state. He is not cured. The cure is so remarkable that I have let two of my neighbors have the remaining two bottles who are now cured. Very respectfully, L. T. FOSTER.
