waist, arm and hand. If I were to give by accident a larger number than they ask for they mutter 'stupid,' or look amazed.

"What is the length of limb?" "From twenty-seven to twenty-eight inches. You see, that brings it well up over her knee, and then a hose suspender is hooked on, and they are in a trim harness."

"I thought garters were used." "So they are, but for ornament only. They're taken off all the ribbon and lace business and only a buckle, ranging in price according to their means."

"Does it materialize?" "You've struck it. I can see the entire stocking supply dancing about as if filled with--well, patent forms."

"No more lightning effects!" "Yes, indeed. We keep stock to suit all legs. Roman stripes, open work fronts and ombre rings enough to make your head swim."

"What are the popular makes?" "The French goods, or the German imitation. Because the pointed toe they make is best suited to fit the new style of boot."

"That's satisfactory. Do you think they'll take?" "They've taken. I sell dozens daily. The women think they are rapturously lovely."

"How are they fastened?" "Half laced and hooked up the front. But tons going out with a rush."

"How high is the heel?" "From one and a quarter to one and three-eighths inches. This style accentuates the arch of the foot just enough to be pretty and comfortable."
