-The outgoing train eastward this afternoon is over the Chicago & Northwestern road. -Two plain drunks were the only new cases in police court yesterday.

-Hand-painted china, art pottery, solid silverware, bronzes, etc., at Maurer & Craig. -Here is to be a teachers' meeting at the Bloomer school building at 10 o'clock this forenoon.

-The new meat market of Shull & Mullen, 719 South Main street, guarantee best of meats and prompt attention. -Still the query goes the rounds: "What has become of the gallant Major Anderson?" Has he followed his boom and disappeared entirely?

-A fine assortment of Boots and Shoes, sufficient to supply the demands of all, at George Blaxin's south Main street. -Cheap Railroad tickets to all points, Dubuque, five dollars postoffice, sells them. Entrance, Main or Pearl streets.

-Permits to commit matrimony have been granted to C. A. Cline and R. A. Rabelia Elwick, of Carson, and L. P. Larson and Clara Larson, of Council Bluffs. -Rev. L. Y. Hays, of Crawfordville, Ind., into church the pulpit of the Presbyterian church to-morrow morning and evening.

-There are not many indications yet that the enforcement of the ordinance restraining the running at large of cattle is being made as promised. -Joseph Reiter makes the Finest Suits in the latest styles, at the lowest possible prices. His merchant tailoring establishment is at 310 Upper Broadway, Council Bluffs.

-All business men should bear in mind the meeting of the board of trade next Monday evening, to discuss the paving question, a matter which concerns all property owners. -Freddie Bates, the little son of Ed Bates, was in a hopeful condition yesterday as could be expected after the fearful injuries he received and the necessary amputation. The boy shows pluck worthy of a hero in bearing his sufferings.

-The police will doubtless learn one lesson from the Gillis sensation. If wise they will not hereafter try cases on the street and dispose of them there, but will bring all parties concerned into court and let the matter be disposed of there. Then there can no so easily arise suspicion that officers are "fixed."

-Now the public will be anxious to see what the city authorities will do with the man White, who has hung around here for months and who owned the stand yesterday that he was playing the trade of a confidence man. He owns up that he is crooked. He has been discharged from the charge of assault. Now let him be made to answer for what law he does violate.

-Several boys, sons of well known citizens, who have been reading a copy of the blood and thunder story papers, joined together a few days ago as a band of gallant freebooters, secured a revolver, took some provisions from their mothers' cupboards, and started out. It was their intention to go as far as Weston, but a little ways out of town became frightened, and hurried back home crying and out of breath. They do not care to try the experiment again.

-The opera of "Little Red Riding Hood" was repeated as a matinee yesterday afternoon at Dehany's in connection with the Catholic fair. Despite the inclemency of the weather there was a goodly-sized audience present, and the entertainment proved highly enjoyable in all respects. Last evening was the closing one of the fair, which has proved in all its details a success, and the managers and workers may well feel satisfied with the results of their labors.

-John Chapman whined piteously yesterday "We are pained not to receive any suggestions in those republican journals which were primarily responsible for the late republican defeats, of any measures or methods whereby the lost ground can be regained." If John means by this white that he is yearning for someone to tell him how to get back to the position of "boss," from which he has been so suddenly tumbled, there is no use for him to wait, as there is no one who can set him on the pedestal again. Ways will be found for regaining the lost ground, but not by making John "boss" again.

-W. W. Loomis, the secretary and treasurer of David Bradley & Co., has come here to make this city his home and to take active control of the business here. At present the company's office is with the Keystone manufacturing company, but Mr. Loomis is pushing their large new building to a speedy completion, and hopes to be able to occupy it next month, or by the first of January. The company ranks high among the heavy manufacturers and dealers in agricultural implements in this country, and Council Bluffs may well feel proud of the establishment here.

A Small Blaze. The alarm of fire last evening was caused by the blazing up of a gasoline lamp in Job Nelson's saloon on Broadway. Nelson threw the lamp out of doors, burning his hand badly, but no further damage was done.

QUEER QUINTETTE.

Gillis and the Confidence Men Furnish Another Day's Entertainment.

Some Streaks of Sensationalism Run Through the Evidence.

The Truth Still Tangled.

Yesterday Judge Aykworth's court drew a good house to listen to the continuation of the evidence in regard to the alleged assault of five confidence men upon a cripple named Gillis, and the charge that the gang secured their release by slipping money into the hands of Officers Casick and Sterling.

John N. Baldwin conducted the prosecution and in his cross-examination of the defendants and their witnesses showed himself sharper than a two-edged sword, making some of the alleged confidence men squirm and sweat, to the delight of the crowd, and bringing to light some strange showings of how the business has been plied here.

The five defendants were united in a denial that there was any violence done to Gillis. The defense endeavored to show that a confidence man named White, on boarding the C. & N. train gave Gillis a $5 gold piece to keep his mouth shut, and that Gillis wanted $20. White said Gillis had a little loud talk about it, and Gillis pulled his revolver and threatened to shoot, whereupon another of the party, calling himself Connorton, wrested the revolver away from him, and in the struggle Gillis fell against a seat and hurt his face.

That then they left the car, and were soon arrested, but Gillis refusing to enter complaint against them, the officers let them go. All denied that they gave the officers any money to secure their release. Connorton testified that he entered the car just as White and Gillis were talking, and heard Gillis say he would run them out of the depot unless money was paid him. He saw White give him $5, and say, "Now, I want you to shut up." Gillis replied, "I ain't no $5 man; I want $20. I get fellows make thousands, and I get only soup." White called him names and threatened to pull his ear, whereupon Gillis pulled a revolver, but Connorton grabbed it before he could shoot. He gave the weapon to another man, and it was handed to the express agent. He and the other four started off, and were arrested by the officers, but Gillis said he had no charge to make, and the officers let them go. He denied using a knife, and saw no one hit or try to hit Gillis.

On being cross-examined he claimed that he resided in Chicago, and was in the advertising business. He played cards, too. He arrived here last Tuesday night on a visit to friends, Marks, Madden, Lucy and others. Howard was the only party in the row whom he knew. He had never seen Gillis before Wednesday morning, he went down to the transfer to take the train, and met the others by chance. On being pressed he did remember that White struck or shoved the cripple, and the latter fell down. He denied using any knife. Mr. Baldwin asked him if he had not told parties since the trouble that he pulled out his pocket knife, as he thought Gillis was going to shoot. At first he denied this, but on Mr. Baldwin thrusting home the question whether he hadn't told him (Baldwin) this in private conversation, Connorton turned red, stammered, and refused finally to answer. He gave as a reason for not going on the train, as he planned, that he didn't want the notoriety on the train, on account of the trouble. After getting badly mixed up, he remarked to Mr. Baldwin—"If you'll just let me off I'll buy you a new hat." A general laugh went the rounds, and after Connorton had braced up enough to deny that he saw the officers bribed, he was allowed to get off the criterion, and was so relieved that he expressed his gratitude to Mr. Baldwin, shook his hand, and remarked, "You're a good one, I must confess."

White, another of the defendants was then put on the stand. He said he was on the train bound for Red Oak. When Gillis came in he gave him $5 and said "Don't tell any of the railway men that there are any monte or confidence men on the train." He said it wasn't enough, and wanted $20. In the main he told the same story to Connorton as to subsequent proceedings.

On being cross-examined he said he was a sporting man; that he gambled on anything in which he thought he would win; that he made his living that way. He admitted getting money by other practices, also. One of these was that of borrowing money from strangers, with no expectation or intention of ever paying the same. When he confessed in substance that he was a confidence man and rambler, Mr. Baldwin had him stand up before the crowd, and then had his physical description put on record, he being a man of medium height, compactly built, sandy hair and red chin whiskers, one hand having two fingers taken off, etc. This scene created another little flurry in the crowd.

White said he frequently boarded the trains for the purpose of gambling, and that he paid Gillis the money because he didn't want to be pointed out.

Another of the defendants, Howard, had a different excuse for going to the transfer. He wanted a conductor to carry a letter to his wife in Chicago. Like all the rest he denied that any body tried to strike or stab Gillis, and denied the story of the officers being bribed.

Maxwell, another defendant, who is known by some as Russell, said that his business at the transfer was to see about his valise, and like all the others claimed that they were all strangers, and yet changed to be all in the same car, and they left it all in a body. He said that Gillis had pointed him out on several occasions as a confidence man. Maxwell or Russell said he was a bartender, and had been living in Dayton. Charles Duncan was brought on the stand and out a sorry figure. He said he happened to be in the car, and that the defendant had stated the truth about the $5 gold piece, and the starting of the row. As soon as Gillis drew the revolver the witness made a rush to get out of the car, and the policeman, off his feet, heaped ballot boxes, ballots, tickets, inspectors, clerks and books in a confused mass in a corner, smashed every piece of furniture in the room, and was busily engaged in mopping up the floor with the challenger when police reinforcements arrived.

As the glass eyes, teeth, tufts of hair, bits of skin and other relics were raked from the heap in the corner, it was decided to postpone temporarily the count in that district, at least until the rest of the tellers could be sorted out. When his friend got well Robinson informed him confidentially that the man he had challenged was the opposition candidate voting for himself.

Not an experiment or cheap patent medicine is Brown's Iron Bitters. It is prepared by one of the oldest and most reliable chemical firms, and will do all that is claimed for it.
