and have been carefully selected from the whole season's hatching, the order having been given early last spring. No expense has been spared to secure the best specimens of this kind. This enterprise, for which the proprietor of the Steele farm deserves great credit, does not end with the importation of the poultry; it consists also of an incubator for the hatching of the eggs by artificial heat. This machine holds seven hundred and twenty eggs. The heat is applied by two kerosene lamps which heat the water, causing it to circulate through pipes under and over the egg drawers, thus producing an even and healthy heat, which heat is then governed by an electric battery and clock work, thus regulating the amount of heat necessary for the successful hatching of the eggs, to a degree of exactness which is not surpassed by any nature herself. It may also interest your readers to know the kind and extent of buildings necessary to accommodate and securely house against the frosts of a Dakota winter this fine flock of poultry. The houses are now under construction and consist of a house two hundred feet long by sixteen feet wide, eight feet front, four feet rear, and made sufficiently warm by all the best material known to the builder's trade in this western country. Next comes a hatching house sixteen by thirty-two feet, also to be built in the best possible manner for warmth and ventilation. Then a chicken house to be twenty feet wide and one hundred feet long, and to be heated by a system of hot water circulation, the heater and pipes for which are on the ground ready to be put in when the building has been completed.

FARM NOTES. Hog are Omnivorous. It is remarkable how many farmers there are who seem to wholly ignore the fact that any other food than dry corn is suitable for swine, when it is within their power to keep stock half or two thirds of the year on food not nearly so expensive and on which it would thrive much better. No man is really a successful hog raiser who relies on corn alone or an exclusive grain diet of any kind for building up the framework of his growing pigs and shoats. Grain is all essential at feeding times but only at moderate extent before. Small Grain for Pigs. Western farmers have become so accustomed to making pork from corn that they scarcely know what to do when a corn crop fails. Many farmers hesitate to settle north of the line where large crops of corn are raised, because they think they can not produce pork to advantage. Now no one will deny that corn is a most excellent food for fattening hogs, and where it can be cheaply produced it is generally the most economical article that can be employed for that purpose. It is true, however, that pork is economically produced in places where corn cannot be ripened and that farmers therefore find as much profit in raising beef and mutton. In Great Britain barley is chiefly used for fattening hogs. In Canada all the small grains except wheat, peas, and roots largely take the place of corn. In the New England states a little corn is used in connection with potatoes, pumpkins, and still feed. A variety of the food given to hogs appears to promote health and to produce most of fine favor. As prices range this season it is likely that oats will prove to be a cheaper food for hogs in many parts of the west where but little corn is raised. Experiments with a few small sows to the place of corn. In the New England states a little corn is used in connection with potatoes, pumpkins, and still feed. Millions Given Away. Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by this wonderful medicine. Call at C. F. Goodman's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself, never fails to cure. It wasn't a Cold Shake. San Francisco Wash. "What is it, darling?" "Gazing upon the still, white beauty of the summer night, lost to all thought save of the sweet young love that filled their beings and intoxicated their senses, living each in the heart of the other and caring for naught else, Mary Boyle and P. Murphy trod silently the shadowy ways that led to the rustic manse known as the Pavilion, in Golden Gate Park. "What is it, darling?" he murmured again, while the moonlight lent a soft, tender tenderness to his tones and his manly bosom throbbled with sympathy. But she answered not. There was a look of anguish on her features. The fair young girl was weeping, and though the ordinary observer might have seen nothing but freckles upon it, the eyes of love looked deeper and saw the wringing of care that told of trouble in her heart. She clasped his hand in hers-- clasped all of it she could in one clasp-- and gasped faintly: "Leave me!" He started as if shot-- started with suddenness-- and there was a pallor on his face as he asked: "You don't mean it?" "Yes, leave me," she answered, almost weeping. "Not for any, darling," she lastly continued, with some embarrassment. "Just a little, plain leave of five minutes' duration." "Leave you unprotected against the errant hawkman and your carnivorous hotel-keeper?" he protested. "It must be."

He left her, and the reckless steps of his ascension shoes as they crunched the gravel made rapid retreating music. Then the maiden stole forth into the moonlight and then into the shadow. A circle of white showed ominously under her polonaise as it trailed along the ground, and with nervous, impetuous steps she sped along the shadow-marked paths, through the sweet, cool night breeze, freighted with the mists of the sea and the perfume of the scrub oak, until a dark glade of the half-acre forest was reached. Here, with none to regard her, her busy hands tied knots and things in mad impetuosity, and then she hurried back. Torn with conflicting emotions of desertion and a cocktail, he was the picture of despair. He leaned against one of the pavilion posts, almost weeping. She laid her hand on his shoulder tenderly, lovingly. "Then it isn't a cold shake," he asked, brightening. There was the light of a great love in her eyes as she held her right ear toward him and murmured, as a woman only can: "No, Patsy dear. It was only my skirt."

KAHOKA, Mo. Feb. 9, 1880. I purchased five bottles of your Hop Bitters of Bishop & Co. last fall, for my daughter, and she was well pleased with the Bitters. They did her more good than all the medicine she has taken for six years. WM. T. MCLURE. The above is from a very reliable farmer, whose daughter was in poor health for seven or eight years, and could obtain no relief until she used Hop Bitters.
