

TRUE Temperance

Is not signing a pledge or taking a solemn oath that cannot be kept, because of the non-removal of the cause—liquor. The way to make a man temperate is to kill the desire for those dreadful artificial stimulants that carry so many bright intellects to premature graves, and desolation, strife and unhappiness into so many families.

It is a well authenticated fact that many medicines, especially 'bitters,' are concocted for use in local option countries. Such is not the case with BROWN'S IRON BITTERS. It is a medicine, a cure for weakness and decay in the nervous, muscular, and digestive organs of the body, producing good, rich blood, health and strength. Try one bottle. Price $1.00.

AN OSTRICH'S NEST. The Care Taken of It by the Parent Plover.

After pairing, the ostrich begins to make his nest. It is the male alone that performs this duty. To do this it squats upon the ground, and balances itself upon its legs, and throws up the sand behind it. When it has dug out enough on one side to suit it, it turns around and begins to dig on the other side, and continues this operation until it has made a hole large enough for it to sit in comfortably.

This nest is elliptical in shape, and is about 0.25 meters deep, 1 meter wide, and 1 1/2 meters long. A few days after the nest is finished the female begins to lay one egg on every alternate day for eighteen or twenty days. She then rests for a while, which time varies from four to ten days, and then begins to lay more. A pair of ostriches yield forty eggs. This is always reached. It is not unusual for a well-fed, well-kept pair to yield fifty and even sixty eggs. The eggs are placed so as to leave no space between them. They are set upon at first for several hours each day, and finally altogether. The male and the female brood alternately. At night the male is always on the nest, as it possesses greater warmth than the female.

When the birds relieve each other on the nest the new comer turns over each egg, in order that the portion which has lain against the nest shall receive the warmth of the brooder. These birds perform their duties with the greatest skill, without any noise or breakage of eggs. They squat down and with their head and neck rake up and overturn every one of the eggs, one after the other, without neglecting a single one. The incubation lasts forty-five days on an average, sometimes fifty days, but never continues beyond that. When the chicklings hatch out they can be heard trying to break the shell of the egg. Sometimes they succeed in doing so, but usually the father breaks the egg under his breast bone, and seizing with his bill the inside skin tears it, reaching the air the chickling remains limp and weak. But the warmth of the parents soon revives it, and a few hours afterward it begins to run about the nest, exercising its long legs, tottling over at each step, and recommencing again its stumbling journey. Four days after their hatching the chicklings begin to eat. They run after insects and swallow small pebbles. The father and mother do not help their little ones find food.

A TRUE ROMANCE AT DAYTON.

A Son Who Will See His Father After Thirty Years' Absence.

Classical Gazette. "Cornelius V. Cain, vagrancy," was the registry on the docket of the Dayton police court a few days ago, and with this brief line there is connected a story of stranger adventures than one man often experiences.

Thirty years ago, Cain, then a mere boy, ran off to sea on a French merchantman. The ship was taken by pirates after a stout resistance, and every one on board except young Cain, an old Spaniard on account of his youth. After seeing all his companions disappear, the boy sadly, but still gratefully, followed his savior, the old Spaniard. He was with these men for years, visiting Peru, Mexico, Brazil, and many other countries of Central and South America, at one time joining cattle ranchers on the plains. Contentment, of course, split up the ship's crew, and sickness played and havoc with them. For eight years Cain lived as a cattle herder, when his ravine disposition again asserted itself, and five years of seafaring followed. He was wrecked off the Bermudas, picked up by an English man-of-war, and taken to Liverpool. Several years were spent in travel through Asia with English merchants. Then followed a trip to the South Sea islands and several narrow escapes from shipwrecks. Some time was spent in mining in California, all, however, spent in a fruitless search for a brother. Another year was spent herding cattle in Texas, and at last Cain determined to come east and seek his father. Traveling mostly on foot, he reached New York in the fall of 1870, and he landed up in the Dayton workhouse as a vagrant. But the most wonderful part of the story is that his father, entirely unknown to him, is an inmate of the Soldiers' home. After thirty years it now seems they are to meet again, and it will be a sight worthy the painter's brush—the meeting of the runaway boy, now a bearded and bronzed man, and the stern parent, once a prosperous manufacturer, now an old and infirm soldier.
