LOCAL BRIEFS.

Sunday was a pleasant winter day—clear and cold.

Leavitt's minstrels arrive from the west on U. P. train No. 4 to-day.

A couple of inches of snow would make the sleighing the finest in the land.

Married at Florence, Neb., January 13th, 1892, Mr. Wm. Chase to Miss Emma Bird, both of above place.

There was a light train west yesterday, including one Pullman and two day coaches. The incoming train had five coaches in all.

The arrests by the police since Saturday night included two plain drunks and one vagrant, besides those mentioned elsewhere. John Lucas was arrested for an unprovoked assault on Colonel E. F. Smythe.

There was a meeting of Division No. 26, of the Y. M. C. A., at 2 p. m. yesterday. The notice mailed was unfortunately not delivered in time for publication.

Married: At Hailer, Idaho, at the residence of the bride's mother, January 2, 1892, Mr. William H. Greenhow, and Miss Alta Wheat.

Mrs. James Bonner fell in her doorway Friday and broke her thigh. The bone was set by Drs. Hart and Dinsmore and the lady is comfortable now.

Master Julius Kaufmann, the youngest son of Councilman Kaufman, who was poisoned by eating castor bean, is now out of danger.

It is reported that E. J. Miller, formerly driver for Mr. James Stephenson, has signed a contract to travel with Fidelity Ryan, the pugilist.

The Heas Opera company appear at the Opera house on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week. The opera to be produced are "Martha"; Thursday, "Martha"; Friday, "Martha"; matinee, "Pinafore"; Saturday night, "Olivette."

A good substitute for sleigh riding is to pull a chair out doors, spread a shawl on the back of it, get in it, and place your feet in a bucket of cold water, shut your eyes, and get one of the children to rattle a string of sleigh bells. The experiment costs nothing, except for medicine. No patent applied for.—The Watchman.

The Iowa Masonic Benevolent Association through W. J. Mount, their agent, have paid Mrs. Dr. McCalland $2,870 and Mrs. J. H. Stein $2,000 on the policies held by their husbands at the time of their decease. This is prompt work and reflects credit on the Association.

Mr. M. A. McNamara Friday received a dispatch from Mr. Thomas Dyer, a leading citizen of Cheyenne, and a gentleman who has many warm friends in this city, requesting him to meet Mrs. Dyer at the U. P. transfer yesterday. Mrs. Dyer has been visiting friends in Canada, and during her stay there their little son died. Mrs. Dyer being now on her way home with the remains. DRILLING FOR DIAMONDS.

A Bold Gang of Safe Blowers at Work.

Baldwin's Club Rooms Raided by the Crowd.

And His Men Driven to Bed at the Fictitious Mouth.

Alarm, Flight and Abandonment of Their Tools.

A Rich Prize Lost by a Close Chance.

With the exception of the series of burglaries for which the Quirk brothers were arrested, there has been no unusually startling events in this line since the raid made on Heimrod & Dorman's safe, which resulted in the death of Bernard Lang.

Sunday morning however quite a sensation was caused by the report that a bold attempt to blow up and rob the safe in Baldwin & Co's club rooms had been made. A Bee reporter was on the ground and learned that the rumor was well founded, and that the robbers were balked in their design by pure luck. The facts are about as follows.

The club rooms were closed about 4:30 a. m. Sunday, the saloon below having been closed earlier in the night, leaving the only persons about the building three men who slept in the third story. The saloon and club rooms occupy the first and second stories of the building next door west of Windheim's store on Douglas street, three doors west of Thirteenth and on the north side of the street. Mr. Wm. Byron, Jake Mock and William Kennedy, three attaches of the establishment, slept overhead as stated.

THE FIRST ALARM. About 5 o'clock the first named, who opens up the saloon in the morning and usually awakens at that hour, was roused from his sleep by a noise below. He thought it hardly possible that they could still be playing but listened until the noise became so violent that he concluded something must be going wrong. He got up, took a match and opening the door to the stairway, stepped out, striking the match as he did so. As the light flashed up he saw a man on the first landing below at the door of the club room.

COVERING HIM WITH A REVOLVER, which Byron says looked as big as a cannon. The stranger said "Get back in there, you ——" and Byron did get back for all that he was worth, slamming the door shut after him. He then heard the noise resumed and was convinced that an attempt was being made on the safe. He went to work to wake up Jake and Kennedy, which he did with great difficulty, as they discredited his warning that they were burglars in the house. They were at a loss what to do, even when convinced, as it is not fine walking into

THE MOUTH OF A BERRINGER and it lacks the glory even of walking up to a cannon's mouth. Finally Byron seeing that something must be done at once went to the front window and raising it uttered a call for "police"; that could have been heard at the Tenth street depot. It was heard very distinctly by the robbers, who ran away at once, leaving their entire outfit of tools, etc., behind. There seemed to be three of them and in the darkness all that could be distinguished was

A BILK HAT AND CURLY HAIR on the taller of the three. As they ran across Douglas street some men near the bank asked "What is the matter?" "I don't know," was the answer of one, as he pulled his hat down over his eyes and ran on.

Other Lane was the first to appear on the scene, and arrested a young man named J. H. Kirkham, who was lying around and unable to give an account of himself, but no one else was to be seen at the time.

WORKING AN ENTRANCE. The work of investigation then proceeded. It was found that an entrance had been effected through the side door east of the saloon, the lock having been partially forced off by the use of a chisel. The next move was on the safe in the main room above. A man was stationed outside to watch and another on the landing above for a similar purpose, while the third did the mechanical part of the business. He was well equipped, having a dark lantern, a brace and bit, a chisel, a pair of nippers, a steel punch, a splendid sledge hammer and three of the finest steel drills, manufactured for this express purpose.

THE SAFE. was in the west side of the room, fronting toward the door. Two three-eighths inch holes were bored in the outer door to the right of the knob and to a depth of two inches and a half. This did not penetrate the inside sheeting and the punch was put in and an effort made to drive it through with the sledge hammer. This was the noise which awoke Mr. Byron and was resumed after he had been driven back at the point of the revolver. All of the articles described were lying near the safe; when the gang fled. Had the safe blowers been left alone a few moments longer they would have won complicity in the robbery and were held to appear to-day and answer to the charge.

MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

An Unfortunate Man Attacks His Aged Mother,

Felling Her to the Floor With a Hammer.

A case to excite the sympathy of the public rather than any other feeling was that which occurred on Chicago, near Twelfth street, Friday in which a man attacked his aged mother and felled her to the floor with a hammer. The name of this man is John Herman, whose relatives are very respectable people in this city. Hon. Fred Behm being his half brother and Mr. Herman, the engineer at Krugs brewery, his full brother. John Herman served during the war in a battery of artillery, and the shock produced by the cannonading affected not only his hearing, but his brain. The inspector long ago pronounced him entitled to a pension, which, for some reason, he has never received. He was always quiet and harmless, except at remote periods when his malady showed itself in a violent form. At other times he did a little carpenter work and other jobs and was kind and mild in his disposition. He lived with his mother, who is quite an old lady, and although on one or two occasions information of insanity have been filed with the commissioners, his relatives have always intervened to keep him out of the asylum.

Friday one of his spells came on, Friday night he attacked his mother, and, after striking her with the hammer, tried, it is said, to throw her on the stove. The prompt assistance of neighbors and others is probably all that saved her life. It was reported Saturday that her injuries were fatal, but inquiry developed the fact that the case was fortunately not so bad as that.

Herman was taken in custody by an officer, another information of insanity being filed against him, and was committed to the county jail to await an investigation by the board.

It said that on one occasion, while employed formerly at Krug's brewery, he made a similar attack on Mr. E. J. Wittig with some heavy instrument.

A Sad Errand.

Mr. Tim Dyer, one of the most wealthy, popular and well known business men in Cheyenne, arrived in this city yesterday on a sad errand. He expects to meet his wife at the transfer this morning with the remains of the little ten year old son, who died at South Bend, Ind., a few days ago. The little lad with his brother had been attending school at the Notre Dame University, and was there taken sick. His mother went on to him, but human aid was of no avail, and now she returns with all that is mortal of a boy idolized by his parents, bright and promising for the future. The grief-stricken parents will proceed on their way home to-day. Mr. Dyer has a wide circle of friends in this vicinity, and the sympathy of all will be with the bereaved family.

THE RELIGIOUS WORLD.

A Sunday Sermon by Reverend Frank Hays.

Union Meetings at the Y. M. C. A. Rooms.

Sermon at the Southwest Presbyterian Church

Yesterday Rev. F. Hays chose as his text "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no steering good with him." Deut. 32, 11 and 12.

The following are some of the thoughts of the sermon: This song of Moses, as it is called, from which the text is chosen, is both glorious and pathetic. Though Moses is anxious to enter the promised land, he knows, on account of the fatal act in his life, he is not permitted this privilege, and this song is sung; and the leader, in his full strength goes up to the mountain to die. On the opposite of glorious and sad, we see, when the power of earth—human powers—become as nothing, then it is that the stability of God's power is evident. He calls upon all Israel for religious lives and zeal in his service. He calls attention to the eagle and her little eaglets and the stirring of that nest that the little inexperienced birds might prepare themselves for life's necessities, and when they are unable to bear themselves by their own wings the eagle catches them and bears them on her wing; and in this simile we see Egypt the nest, the children of Israel the eaglets, and God the bird of swiftness. The Israelites had gone to Egypt when there was a famine, and when they, as a people, were of insignificant reputation. But under the influence of Joseph, the acting ruler, and time for development, they became prepared for self exertion. But that this nest might be abandoned it was necessary that it be stirred, yet as the people are cast from their nest of infancy God flutters over them, by the pillar of fire and cloud, and bears them up by a constant provision; and there is no more need, and their garments did not become old. And as in Egypt there was a cruel king, which was a means by which the nest was stirred; God often uses an evil means to accomplish good results. And we may ask:

1. What is the Lord doing for all people? He is continually stirring up the rest. People are willing to sit in idle complacency and pray unto the Giver of all good for his manifold blessings and protection. And as this benedictor Ruler will grant their desires they continue their prayer and say, "Oh Lord, multiply thy blessings upon me" and they may picture in their imagination a fit habitation in this barren wilderness of transient humanity. But in the answer to that prayer there may be a stirring of the nest, by oppression of rulers, that the object desired may be obtained, but in a different way than was expected. If we pray for the kingdom of Christ to come, there must be a willingness for self-sacrifice and effort. Thus when men pray for blessings and are not willing to take them when they are offered, they are driven from their rest that they may receive it.

2. The nest is sometimes stirred by observation. A rich man in an institution of charity and seeing the little street Arabs given shelter, clothed and fed, is led to thankfulness for his own children and liberality for the poor. There are many in this city at present who may have seen others engaged in worship, are anxious to hear about Christ.

3. By chastisement. To many there are who have written over their doors, "Mene, mene, tekel"—"God hath numbered by kingdom and substituted it, thou art weighed in the balance and found wanting." And it may be the sharp arrows of sorrow, it may be the roarings of the canons of misfortune, it may be the vibrations caused by the earthquake of national conquest, and it may be the noiseless footsteps of death that stir the nest.

4. The eagle flutters over her young and cares for them. Here man can follow God's example; and while other religious give nothing as a recompense for that which is taken away, the Christian religion always gives that which is better than that which has been taken away. Then if anyone has talents these talents should have a place for development in the respective field. And the parent and the Sabbath school teacher should follow this example because it is not the eloquent words from the pulpit, but it is the daily life that is the influential medium. A parent wishes to meet to speak to his sons; and I told that parent to become a Christian himself and that would be the effectual means of reaching his sons. He was their idol and that idol must be Christianized.

5. The Lord's constant help and protection is the rock upon which rests the strong as well as the weak, during the infancy of conquest which ends in blessings.

ANNOUNCEMENT. There will be a meeting on Tuesday night at the Y. M. C. A. rooms of all the denominations at which time they will consider the advisability of holding a union meeting on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday nights of each week, to which this and all the congregations are invited.

AN INSIGNIFICANT BLAZE.

The Fire on Barker's Corner Last Night.

About 10 o'clock last night there was an alarm of fire from box 21, No. 3 engine house, which was promptly responded to by hose companies No. 3 and 2; the former arriving first on the ground and throwing the only stream that was needed.

The fire originated in a frame addition back of Allen Bros' grocery house, in Barker's brick block, on Fifteenth near Farnam, and just back of the place where the fire of a few nights ago broke out. A man who rooms in the building gave the alarm and the fire was extinguished with but slight damage. The hallway of the building was filled with smoke and affairs for a time looked quite threatening. The water did considerable damage to the stock in Allen Bros' store. A very large crowd turned out to see the blaze and went home disappointed at the luck which has always attended this corner.

NOTED FUGLISTS.

Mace and Slade Pass Through Omaha

The conductor of the incoming passenger train on the Union Pacific last evening brought the news that Mace and Slade the well-known pugilists, would pass through Omaha this afternoon, en route to Chicago to meet Sullivan.

It was thought that perhaps they might be induced to stop off and give a sparring match here, and a telegram was sent them asking if inducements would be any object. If they should concede to stop over it would be quite an event for Omaha.

BARRETT'S BILE.

Why He Refused to Appear With Tom Keene.

His Peculiar Ideas as to Himself and Others.

Thomas Keene and Lawrence Barrett are both good actors well known to the theatrical going people of this city, and both having their friends and admirers in this city. The refusal of the latter to play with Keene at the Cincinnati festival has occasioned no little comment in the profession and the press is expressing some very decided opinions.

It appears from the statement of Mr. W. R. Hayden, the popular manager for Mr. Keene, that the engagement of Mr. Keene for the dramatic festival was entirely unolicited, and that there was no disposition on the part of any one to give Mr. Keene undue prominence. The engagement was cancelled owing to Barrett's refusal to appear if Keene took part in the festival. Mr. Hayden says of the action of Barrett:

"It is in accordance with his narrow, egotistical, selfish, quarrelsome disposition, the annoyances of which every actor and manager who has ever had any relation with him thoroughly understand. He objects, as I understand, to appear with Keene in the same cast, because he thinks he would be elevating Mr. Keene to a position he does not deserve. This ridiculous statement has made Mr. Barrett the laughing stock of the entire profession. He has always tried to pull every fellow actor down, and walk upon their shoulders to success."

"How different" said Manager Hayden, "is the attitude of John McCullough. His whole soul has been made him as much an idol of the profession as he is of the public. He wants every actor to succeed. He says the field is large and gives them a helping hand and when any man or woman makes a hit on the stage no actor is more pleased to hear it than John McCullough; and he opens his generous heart to all who come to him to seek counsel. When Keene, three years ago, made his debut in Chicago McCullough played at one house and Barrett at the other. When McCullough heard of Keene's great success he sent a note, prompted by his own big heart, full of kindness, good wishes and advice. When Booth heard of his success he sent Keene a belt to wear in Hamlet and a letter full of friendship."

"Barrett, it is said," continued Mr. Hayden, "states that Keene is not entitled to the position he has secured. Every man is entitled to the position he has secured. Keene has gone through a training such as few actors have had. Keene played every line of business played by Forrest before he became noted as an actor, but in comedy, melodrama, tragedy, he achieved success in a far greater variety of parts than ever Mr. Barrett did. He has attained a far greater popularity than ever Mr. Barrett has secured or ever will secure. He has obtained the friendship and esteem of the dramatic profession."
