The Attempted Train Robbery at Montella.

The Oool Pluck of Rose, the Express Messenger.

The first sensation which has happened for a long time in the way of an attempted train robbery, formerly so common along the line between Omaha and San Francisco, was that reported by telegraph from Montella, a station on the Central Pacific, on Sunday morning. Seven of the passengers on that train passed through Omaha last evening on the Union Pacific, and from one of those was obtained some additional particulars of interest relating to the affair. Montella is a star station on the Central Pacific, that is one on which the regular trains do not stop. It is 169 miles west of Ogden, and the east bound train is due there at 1:05 a. m. On Sunday morning the passengers were awakened by a shot being fired and an unusual noise, as of some one pounding on a car door, and on investigating found that the express car had been detached from the train. A couple of guards on either side of the train and two more waking off with the conductor from them, to incarcerate him with others in the tank house, was what our informant saw when he first stepped out upon the platform. The engineer, fireman and brakemen had preceded the conductor and were safely lodged away. The original plan was to ditch the train and the switch had been left open for that purpose, but the engineer saw the danger in time and stopped his train. When he got off to see what the danger was he was captured along with the other members of the crew imprisoned. The express car was "cut out" by the bandits, who then began the attack by smashing in the panes on both sides of the car, and shooting through it in all directions, being stubbornly resisted by the Wells, Fargo messenger, Mr. Ross. He was struck by two shots, one hitting him in the hand and the other in the hip, but neither hurt him badly. Ross returned the fire, being guided by the sounds outside. He fired through the roof at the robbers who had climbed to the top, and fired six or seven shots to burn the end of the car as the robbers were unimpeded. The prisoners in the tank house heard the robbers say that one of their gang had been wounded in the leg. Ross dragged the iron safe to one side of the car, put the wooden chest on its cork mattress between them. He was armed with a six shooter and a double barreled shotgun, and blazed away on all sides. Then the robbers threatened to burn him out, but he refused to surrender. They went after wood to burn him out, but found only a handful on the engine, and then several of the fellows started out to get more, but did not find it. Ross kept them at bay until the west bound passenger train came up, but the robbers ordered the conductor to move on, and he moved with his train. It was expected that he would return after running a short distance and drive off the robbers, but he did not. The robbers returned to the attack on Ross, but he held out until another train came along in about three-quarters of an hour and the robbers left. The passengers gave Ross a testimonial when they reached Ogden.

FIRE ESCAPES.

Just at present the topic of the hour is how to get out of a burning building, and fire escapes are being largely discussed and introduced. Newhall was well provided with fire escapes. The trouble with the whole system of escapes is: The strangers know nothing about them, and in the confusion and din and smoke of a great fire nobody knows where they are or how to use them. Common sense suggests that elevators be abolished or so built as not to be fire conductors. It is noticeable in all the late great fires that the elevators have played a conspicuous part in spreading the flames and smoke and cutting off the escape of the victims. If the elevator in the Newhall house had been properly built all the people could have been saved; for in the first place no such fire could have happened. The shaft of that elevator conducted smoke and sparks and flame to the top story just as fast as they could rise, and cut off all escape by way of the accustomed route. Hence the bewilderment of all those of all those smoke strangled people. Elevators can be built so as to be the very best of fire escapes, and at the same time act as aids in suppressing the flames, and next to the elevator, the stairway is the best fire escape if built properly. Let there be an ordinance passed compelling all hotels, theaters, public halls and school buildings using elevators to build fire proof shafts—i. e., shafts from ground to roof built of brick or boiler iron, and shut off by iron doors from each story, with the elevator platform running "tight fit" so as to keep out the smoke from above and below, running on iron gears. Such an elevator would go up and down through fire and smoke and empty story by story, if the fire originated below or above; and it will be seen the elevator has an outer opening on a street. Any sensible architect could soon devise such a life protecting sensible elevator. The next best, and adjunct, is to abolish by ordinance open balustraded stairways in public buildings. They are good fire conductors. Build box stairways with iron cut-offs at each landing, so as to confine smoke and fire to the story where it originates.

PADDY'S PROTEGE.

"The Nebraska Giant" Dividing Honors With the Maori.

Omaha's Future Song—"Baby Mine."

A careful perusal of the newspapers of the east and west just now will show the fact that the public mind is about equally interested in pugilism, railway schemes and United States senatorial elections. The first named takes supremacy of anything, and the revival of interest in the "Maori" is confined to no locality, but exists all over the country. In Chicago the old Omaha boy, "Baby" Barnes, is dividing honors with the Maori half breed, Slade, while the old reliable like Paddy Ryan, Harry Hill and Jim Maco are gathering into the wicked city as if they were to lead the forlorn hope in the battle of Armageddon. Like the elders of a family, their noses are now ready out of joint in the presence of the two infants in the prize ring, Slade and "Baby" Barnes, the "Nebraska Giant" in CHICAGO.

MEDICAL LEGISLATION.

The Bill Now Before the Nebraska Law Makers.

OMAHA, January 23, 1883. To the Editor of The Bee. A bill now pending before the state legislature, introduced by Mr. Sessions, and read for the second time on January 10, 1883, having for its object the establishment of a state board of health for certain sanitary objects and for the regulation of the practice of medicine, has attracted my attention. Of its sanitary measures I have nothing to say, but its medical regulation features is something that should occupy the attention of all medical men. This act proposes to establish a board of five medical men, to be graduates of reputable medical colleges (a somewhat vague term), to be appointed by the governor of the state. Three members of this board shall constitute a quorum, and they are given power by this act, not only to demand a diploma from the practitioner, but, if a majority of the board think fit, an examination as well, and according to section 13 of this act they can "annul any certificate upon proof that the holder has been guilty of immoral or unprofessional conduct"—vague terms those, of which the same majority are to be alone the judges. Now this act seems to me very arbitrary. In the first place, the governor of the state is not a competent judge of medical men enough to appoint such a board. It seems to be a kind of royal commission given to whom the governor thinks most needs the place, and if he is a republican or a democrat or anti-monop, he will be apt to make it a political instead of a medical board. We do not need legislation for individuals, we need it more for those money-making corporations, the medical colleges, who, all of them, are legally chartered to grant diplomas. If legislation is demanded from the practitioner an examination it ought to demand a much more stringent one from all teachers in medical schools. Instead of that the law regarding the chartering of medical colleges is so lax that any two or three men with means enough can get a charter in ten days time—education or not—and grind out a mass of students as they please and all legally. What we need in these days more than anything else in a legislative way is to deprive every medical college in the United States of its licensing power and throw it upon our state universities or upon a board elected by the American Medical Association, the only competent body fit to elect a board sufficiently able and unbiased for all regular practitioners in the United States. Let medical schools teach and an unbiased board examine, and quacks will soon become extinct in the United States. ANON.

THE NEBRASKA GIANT.

The Chicago Times of Tuesday publishes the following: No word was received from Richard K. Fox yesterday. His representative, William E. Harding, is still in the city awaiting the arrival of his superior and the slugging from the west. He paid a visit of inspection yesterday to Paddy Ryan's importation, the "Nebraska Giant," and gave his deductions to a reporter of The Times as follows: "There is every indication of George Barnes being a man of great promise in the pugilistic arena. His proportions and bearing at least stamp him as a coming man. He has broad chest, a good, thick neck set on a pair of good, broad shoulders, and above all, to use the vernacular, he has got a 'fighting mug,' which is indicated by the great space between the ear and the point of the jaw. There is another point in his favor, and that is he is a good-looking fellow. It is an erroneous idea, generally entertained, that prize fighters must necessarily look like bulldogs. You must remember that, of the old champions, Tom King, John C. Heenan and Tom Sayers were all good looking men, while at the present time Jim Maco, Tom Goharran, Paddy Ryan and Johnny Dwyer—all of whom have held the championship—possess features above mediocrity. Of course I have never seen Barnes perform, but Paddy Ryan is a capital judge of what should constitute a first-class pugilist, and he says that Barnes is very clever, considering that he has not had the advantage of instruction, but with a few weeks' experience he will be able to hit, 'job,' 'counter' and 'step' with the science and agility of a Maco. Ryan will take him to New York for exhibition at the Madison Square garden next month, when, if he proves a success, Mr. Fox will back him against Sullivan, provided his first choice, Slade, does not meet the requirements. As for the Maori, he stands six feet two and a half inches, measures forty-five inches across the chest, and in fighting costume weighs 221½ lbs. Maco thinks there is no man in the world can beat him. Mr. Fox's anxiety to find a man to whip Sullivan is principally animated by a spirit of revenge for the scurvy treatment of Fox when he first brought the championship from the straits of Hongkong. Harry Hill, the ex-wickedest man in New York City, who is in Chicago waiting for Maco and Slade, says of Barnes: "Well, this young feller Ryan's got 'im is a likely-looking man, and his 'e'andles 'imself has well has 'e looks 'a his good one." A Convention of Sluggers Special Session to This Date. CHICAGO, January 24.—Jim Maco and Slade, the Maori, who came all the way from Australia to meet John L. Sullivan, in a fistie encounter, arrived here this morning. They went direct to the head quarters for the pugilistic fraternity and were welcomed by Jim Elliott, Jno. Charles, of Baltimore; W. E. Harding, of the Police Gazette; "Parson" Davies and others. Elliott's backers expressed a desire to have a go at Slade and later in the day Paddy Ryan wanted to make a match for his "Nebraska giant," but Maco declined to enter into any negotiation for Slade until Richard K. Fox, of New York, should have seen him and decided for himself. His desire was to have Slade meet Sullivan. Harding looked Slade over and was so well satisfied that he telegraphed Fox to post $1000 each in matches to fight Sullivan a regular prize fight and under Marquis of Queensbury rules, four rounds. The party left this morning and are due in New York Friday morning. If you are a frequenter or a resident of a miasmatic district, barbedore your system against the scourge of all new countries, agas, biliousness and intermittent fevers—by the use of Hop Bitters. FAILURES AND FIRES.

Willis M. Yates Makes an Assignment.

A Hastings Hardware Man Suspends Business.

A Fire and a Failure Across the River.

During the past few weeks numerous rumors have been afloat as to the probability of Mr. Willis M. Yates, the well known Dodge street, grocer, suspending business. They were called out by the numerous failures which have been recorded in this city this winter and were increased in number yesterday and the reports confirmed by the filing in the county clerk's office of an assignment in due form by Willis M. Yates, to Mr. A. C. Troup. About ten days ago Mr. Yates stated that on October 28th, 1882, his stock amounted to $4,000. It has since been reduced some, but is worth about $3,000 to $3,500. His book accounts amount to $3,200 and his store fixtures, safe, two horses and wagons, which cost $2,000, are worth $1,000 at least. He was owing, all told, $7,000. "Could I collect my book accounts, or could I sell my stock at invoice prices I could pay all I owe outside of what I owe H. W. Yates, who will allow me to use it in another business. I have advertised to sell my business, and will do so as soon as I can find the man who will pay me a reasonable price, and thus furnish me with funds to pay my merchandise debts. Sold all my real estate a year or more ago." Well informed parties said they believed that Mr. Yates was honest, but was inclined to place his valuation too high. His stock was estimated not worth over $2,500 by competent judges and his book accounts, good, could not be considered worth over $2,000. His fixtures were also estimated at about $700 or $800. Could he have sold out at a good price he would be able, doubtless, to pay up, but he was considered as hardly solvent at a safe valuation. Mr. Yates was anxious to treat all his creditors alike, he said, and therefore did not like to give anyone special security, being desirous of doing up his business as if possible. On the 10th of January, however, he gave the Nebraska National bank a chattel mortgage to secure the payment of two notes dated in October and due in 90 days. The amount of these notes is $900 and the security covers the stock and fixtures of the store, horses, etc. It is stated on good authority that the stock will not figure up over $2,000 in value, and that the book accounts, which are good, will not exceed $1,000, while the indebtedness of the house will, it is said, exceed $3,000. The heaviest local creditors are the firms of Stegert, Johnson & Co., whose claim is $1,000 and Millard & Peck, about $500, while Meyer and Ranke, Pecke Bros., and Metcalf & Bro., all lose small sums, less than $100 each, and Maroney over $100. Five eastern creditors have claims in the hands of an attorney here aggregating $800. Mr. H. W. Yates' claim is put at between $3,000 and $4,000, and the balance are all merchandise claims.

PLANE FACTS.

A Carpenter's Opinion of Needs of the Trade.

Mr. Editor: A very important and practical question at this time concerns quite a number of the Omaha carpenters as to the outlook for business for the coming season. Some are asking their friends if they think it possible that a carpenter can live in Omaha another year. Some express doubts and some declare their intention of leaving town soon as possible. Now then to an outsider this may seem strange talk in a city large as Omaha, where so great improvements have been going on for the last five years, and may continue to go on for years to come. Well it is strange from one standpoint, but not strange as to the real cause. Suppose the average building boom in Omaha continues to go on for years to come under the present modus operandi, every Omaha carpenter with six months of Omaha experience at the trade is well convinced that the longer he stays in Omaha as a carpenter the worse off he gets to be. And why so? Now that's the question to be solved by the average Omaha carpenter who is compelled, as it were this winter, to divide one meal into three in order to go through the motion of eating three meals a day. Now we want to ask if all concerned in the business, as it relates to our pecuniary interest and welfare, would it not be wiser would it not be good sense in us to fraternize as mechanics and take this matter into consideration in order to reach or mature some system whereby the trade can be made more remunerative and respectable to its possessor? For our own special benefit we have gone over the ground and taken in the situation from cause to effect as we understand it, but do not feel disposed to give out our ideas or opinions at this time, any more than so serious do I think the matter so serious that will adjust every difficulty.

FIRES AND FAILURES.

The news is also received of the burning of four stores early Tuesday morning at Heppburn, Page county, Iowa. The stores were: Robert Roberts, general merchandise; W. H. Harrison, grocer; W. Owens, grocer, and N. E. McCohn & Co., druggists. The stock was nearly a total loss. Roberts was fully insured, Harrison about half insured, Owens and McCohn, no insurance. The latter admits that he is "flat on his back," but Owens, who owns a hotel in the same place, will probably pull through all right.

FILES.

Files are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to stoop, or he has some affection of the kidney, or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, as flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, thick, purulent, producing a very disagreeable itching, particularly at night after getting warm in bed, is a very common attendant. Internal, External and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Ross's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the parts affected, absorbing the tumors, allaying the intense itching, and affording a permanent cure where all other remedies have failed. Do not delay until the drain on the system produces permanent disability, but try it and be cured. Schroter & Becht.
