PENNSYLVANIA is about to pass a law providing for boards of arbitration to settle differences between employers and employes in the iron. steel and coal trades. The idea might well be adopted in other states and the scope of the measure extended to take in other trades. Arbitration as a means of settling labor disputes has proved a great success in England, and there is no resson why it should not be equally successful here. Millions of dollars annually would be saved if the disastrous strikes and lock-outs could be prevented by a mutual understanding between the employer and employe.
