The Russian posteffite guarantees the safe delivery of any letter for oneeighth of one per cent of the declared value of the inclosure. Bankers employ this safeguard largely, and such perfect confidence is felt in the safe delivery of insured letters that many persons take the risk of sending larger sums than they insure for. The officials have seldom thought it worth while to verify the contents of insured ietters, but their attention having been attracted by the smallness of the values regularly declared by a certain firm of bankers in St. Petersburg, they opened a letter insured for 1 600 roubles and found it to contain 120, 000 roubles. The law is that in case of a false valuation the entire inclosure shall be forfeited, and in this instance their dishonest economy cost the bankers about $77,000.
