

A MERCILESS MOTHER.

She Deserts Her Child, Only Six Months Old.

A Policeman with a Heart as Big as a House.

About 9 o'clock yesterday morning a woman who was waiting with other passengers in the ladies' waiting room, at the Union Pacific depot asked a lady sitting near her to take care of her six months old child, until she stopped out for a few minutes. The request was complied with, but the minutes lengthened into hours, and when noon had passed and she did not return it became evident that it was a clear case of desertion.

The temporary nurse of the baby did not care to assume the responsibility of taking an infant not her own and accordingly a telephone message was sent to the marshal's office for a policeman and Officer Pat Hinchey was detailed for the service. He went down expecting to find a drunken man or a turbulent one to be lugged off to the calaboose and he was dumfounded when he discovered that he was expected to take the child to the police station, as he states that he was peremptorily ordered to do by Capt. Payne, one of the officers employed by the U. P. company to do police duty.

When Officer Hinchey replied that he would first have a look for some place suitable to take the baby, he says Capt. Payne became very indignant and talked to him arrogantly and insultingly before a room full of passengers, upon the supposition that it was one of the duties of babies whenever they were left without a guardian and were in other people's way.

Mr. Hinchey was not to be bullied, but went down to the telephone in the telegraph office and got the operator to call up the marshal and see if he knew of any place where the waif could be cared for. The marshal did not know of any and St. Joseph's hospital was called up, and one of the sisters responded that there was provision for such cases at the convent, and they had better communicate with them.

The convent is away out on St. Mary's avenue, and Officer Hinchey thought that rather than carry the little one so far off through town he had better take care of it himself. He and the operator went in and took the baby into the depot dining room where they fixed up some bread and milk for it, but it refused to eat, and he then took it to his arms and carried it to his own home, on Twelfth and Arbor streets, where he has a family of nine children. He has a little one of his own, and his wife divided their baby's store of food provided by nature with the little stranger who took to it at once and was soon as happy, if not happier than it was in its mother's arms. Here Mr. Hinchey proposes to see that it is well cared for until the commissioners provide it with a home or some adopted family who want a "well sprung" child, and it is very certain it will not suffer while under his hospital roof.

Officer Hinchey feels justly hurt at the manner in which he was treated by Capt. Payne, who was entirely uncalled for and out of place. It was no part of his business to relieve the company or its officer of such a charge, the county commissioners and not the police department, being the proper authorities to apply to, and in such a case as this, a man with ordinary humanity would have aided in seeing that the baby got a home, and not a cot in the county jail with its atmosphere reeking with tobacco and liquor, and stormy with drunken oaths and blasphemy. Pat Hinchey is a broke and he could not have shown it any better man in the way he disposed of the waif by adding to the number of his already large family. It can never be said to him "Inasmuch as ye did it not to the least of these, my little ones."

An Extraordinary Case. AGSTIN, TEXAS, Feb. 20, 1880. To Mr. J. W. Graham, Druggist: Dear Sir—My case was an acute form of bronchitis, and was of one and a half year's duration. It employed the best medical aid possible, but failed rapidly, until the doctor said I would die—that my case was incurable. Thrown upon my own resources, I got a bottle of Dr. W. H. Hall's Lung and Sore Throat Lozenges, and in six hours felt a decided relief. In three days the cough almost disappeared. Now that my chances of life are good for many years, I earnestly recommend the above to every sufferer of lung or throat disease. C. G. LATHROP, feb 24dew-eod-1w

LETTER FROM BERLIN.

Mr. Booth and His Great Successes Abroad—His Family Sorrows.

Special Correspondence of the Globe-Democrat. BERLIN, February 4, 1883.—If I am to make the acquaintance of my countrymen who read the great religious daily, I can not please them better, perhaps, than to say something of our famous brother, Edwin Booth, but for whom all Berlin bows itself.

He has been here several times on the stage here, and recently my pride in him was increased by making his acquaintance at a dinner party given in his honor by one of the American colony. There were no Germans present except Herr Ginsburg, who has married a beautiful young American lady, a Miss Black, formerly of Detroit. She is a famous beauty here, and dresses with exquisite taste.

As I had never before seen this tragedian of the stage here, a new creature in social life, and an elegant mannered, polished gentleman. His jet black hair is plentifully sprinkled with gray, and those big black eyes look just the same as in Hamlet. He is a fine conversationalist, and proved especially entertaining at the after dinner smoke. He is much pleased with his success here, as he has every reason to be. Mr. Booth said: "When I go to stab the king in Hamlet I am accustomed to fight my way to him through the drawn swords of the attendants, but while playing in Great Britain I received a painful wound in this way. One of the swords struck me in the arm near the elbow, inflicting a painful wound, and I was obliged to have it bandaged with arnica, and the arm became very stiff and swollen. It seemed a sort of blood poisoning, for the other arm sympathized with it and also troubled me. It was very difficult, with both arms bandaged and swollen, to go through the play, and it gave me terrible pain. It is all right now, but I am afraid to try it here, and so go through without it."

In reply to a remark by one of the party he said: "Well, there is one kind of man I don't like to meet. It is those great Shakespearean scholars who ask me if I think Hamlet is really mad. They get clear beyond me, and I don't care to go into abstract facts."

"Oh," laughed a gentleman, "imagine anyone getting beyond Mr. Booth in Shakespeare!" We soon returned to the other room, where the conversation not being so general, we missed the further pleasure of his society. On the next evening we gave his King Lear for the first time here. The house was crowded and he made another great triumph; the applause was stormy and he was recalled repeatedly. The papers seem to think more favorably of his Lear than of his Hamlet. One journal said it was a piece of acting that all the German actors should witness and profit by, for they could all learn from him.

There always seems to be a shadow of some sort over Booth's life, and the matter which is now troubling him is all the worse because it is the shadow of a sufferer. She is betrothed to a young American, who, three or four months ago, was almost asphyxiated by inhaling coal gas. As his recovery has been very slow, Mr. Booth wrote to the young man's father to send the invalid to them while they were in England, as he supposed a change of surroundings and the revivage would hasten his return to health, and the pleasure which the lovers would experience in being together would be a great factor in the case. The father of the lover consented, and the young man's sister accompanied him. They have been with the Booths now several weeks, but the invalid's health has not improved. His blood seems to be poisoned, and it has affected his brain in a peculiar way. He is not insane, but he can not remember as formerly, and has to be directed and watched. He has lost all interest in his profession and in his contemplated marriage. Isn't that unfortunate? Miss Booth is plunged in melancholy by the sad circumstances, and can seldom be coaxed out of her hotel. The doctors say the young man may recover inside of two years, but they think it doubtful. It is probable that he and his sister will return home in a few weeks, or at least they will not treat of the Booths, as there is nothing to be gained by making two people wretched. Headache Miss Booth, who knows that something has made it temporarily impossible for him to show his affection and regard. The hopelessness of the case is its saddest feature. And, of course, Miss Booth realizes that there is nothing she can do to restore him.

AN EPISODE OF THE WAR. Major D. W. Reed Finds the Owner of a Captured Revolver.

Waukon (Ia.), Democrat. Twenty years ago this coming fall, Charles F. Manderson, then Lieutenant-Colonel of the Nineteenth Ohio Infantry, a regiment raised in the northern part of the Buckeye state, and in which were a number of the old schoolmates of the editor of this paper, had his baggage captured by the rebel soldiers, and among other articles taken by them were a pair of revolvers which had been presented to the colonel by the boys of his regiment. What became of them he never knew. In the summer of 1865, our fellow townsman, Major D. W. Reed, who was then an officer in the 12th Iowa Infantry, was appointed provost marshal of a portion of Alabama, and with headquarters at Selma, and his regiment was placed on patrol duty in various portions of the county round about. At the little town of Center, in Cherokee county, was an ex-rebel soldier named Daniels, who was creating a great deal of disturbance in the community and causing the union soldiers no little annoyance and trouble. He was considered a desperate character and he was greatly feared by the inhabitants as well as the soldiers. He had put himself at the head of a posse of men who opposed the union soldiers in the performance of their duties and two or three of the boys had been killed, possibly by Daniels himself. Major Reed finally received orders to effect, if possible, Daniels' capture. The major took a company of men and stationed them in the town of

Center presumably to do provost duty, looking up lost government property, etc. Not one of his men knew the real purpose for which the company was there. After they had been stationed there for some days the major sent the soldiers to boarding around among the citizens, one of them going to the residence of the man Daniels, who, by the way, kept himself secreted in some safe place, mistrusting that the soldiers were after him. Daniels, however, finally ventured to come home occasionally during the night. The major then informed the soldier who was boarding there was up and for him to let him quietly know when Daniels was at home again. This he did, and one morning about daylight the terror of the neighborhood was surprised and captured as he was about to leave the house for his hiding place. He was marched to headquarters under a strong guard which had been detailed to capture him. In searching him one of Col. Manderson's stolen revolvers was found upon his person. This Major Reed took possession of and has retained ever since. Some years ago he wrote to the adjutant general of Ohio to try to get trace of Manderson, but he could not succeed in doing so. Thus the matter has rested until a few days ago, when Major Reed happened to pick up a paper in which was an account of the election of one Gen. C. F. Manderson to the United States senate by the legislature of Nebraska. The mayor at once very naturally concluded that this must be the owner of the revolver in his possession, and he immediately penned a letter to him. In a few days back came the following reply:

OMAHA, Neb., Feb. 14, 1883. Major D. W. Reed, Waukon, Ia. MY DEAR SIR:—Your favor received. I am glad to hear from my long lost revolver, and I wish I could obtain track of its mate also. The pair (valuable to me as a present from my regiment—the Nineteenth Ohio) were captured with a baggage train between Stevenson and Chattanooga. I had taken the short track by bridge path over the mountains, with one orderly, and got safely through. The "Johnny Rebs" went through my trunk, destroying that which they did not steal, and left me almost bare at the beginning of the severe winter campaign of 1863-4.

You will send me the revolver by express at my cost.

With many thanks for your kindness, I am, Very Yours, CHAS. F. MANDERSON.

The revolver was forwarded last Monday, and by this time Gen. Manderson is probably rejoicing in the possession of one of his long lost revolvers, and showering blessings upon our worthy postmaster for the good care he has taken of it. The revolver is one of the Moore patent, a seven shooter with six inch barrel, silver mounted, and bears upon its handle the name of the manufacturer, Wm. W. Moyer, Carriage Manufacturer, Mott St., New York.

It is a present from the soldiers of the 19th Ohio Infantry.

Gen. Manderson formerly resided in Canton, Ohio, where he practiced law. In 1869 he removed to Omaha, Neb., has resided there ever since engaged in his profession, and has risen to great prominence, although only 45 years of age. He is a gentleman of unblemished reputation and whose talents have brought him into high public position.
