FALSE LEGS AND ARMS.

Wonderful Perfection Reached in Making Artificial Limbs.

What They are Made of and How Operated.

Writing With Indian Rubber Hands and Shaking on Wooden Legs.

Fewer persons are seen on the streets in New York with empty sleeves and using crutches than in any European city with an equal population.

The records of the American Patent Office show 150 patents, or more than double of all European patents for similar inventions.

To supply the loss of any one limb, or of all limbs, the manufacture of artificial members has been brought to such perfection that they can be used by their wearers with almost as much facility as the natural limbs.

Artificial limbs are now almost universally made of Willow wood, affording greater strength, lightness and utility than could be obtained with other materials.

The articles of to-day obviate all this. Over the willow foundation is stretched a covering of leather which is ornamented to represent the natural flesh, while the joints are articulated by means of light springs of steel, rubber and cord, according to the formula of each particular maker.

Mr. A. A. Marks, of No. 169 Broadway, is one of the largest manufacturers in this country. He now has in his employment a man and a boy who are fitted each with two false legs. Both can run and walk almost as well as those possessing their natural limbs.

FALSE ARMS.

His arms are so constructed that they can be fitted to a stump at the shoulder that is no longer than two or three inches, and yet be made to act almost as well as the natural limb.

These arms are so constructed as to enable the wearer to take off his hat or put it on, raise a cigar, or to take hold of and lift anything of moderate weight.

MARVELLOUS EXCELLENCE.

In addition to the usual artificial limbs a large practice is had in constructing a shortened or deformed leg to agree with the fellow and so well that the done that detection is impossible when the wearer is dressed.

A leg or an arm will last usually from five to fifteen years. Mr. Marks, employe, to whom reference has already been made, states that he for years was accustomed to skate and that too after he took to wearing his two artificial legs.

HOW THEY OPERATE. The mode in which the artificial legs operate when worn is as follows: When the leg is moved forward to make a step, the heel first comes in contact with the ground; when the ankle moves the foot draws down on a spring which sets instantly on the knee joint, holding it firm to receive the weight of the wearer; and in step-
