SIGHTS IN SEVILLE.

The Wonderful Cathedral and the Curious annual Performance Within it—Promenading the Paseo.

Correspondence of the Springfield Republican.

SEVILLE, Spain, Feb. 15, 1883.

The cathedral at Seville, is to Spain what St. Peter's is to Italy. Its original founders in 1401 determined to construct a church that should never be equalled, and one that would make everybody think they were mad. It is the largest and finest in Spain, but it is not so large as St. Peter's, nor does it equal the beauty of that at Milan or the grandeur of the one at Cologne. Over one of the entrances hangs what was the crocodile, or el Legarto (whence our term "alligator") which was sent by the sultan of Egypt a few hundred years ago to one of the Spanish kings, with a request for the hand of his daughter. It is reported that the young lady declined the offer, because the present was of an affectionate character. In front of the cathedral, surrounded by high walls, is a court of orange trees, the deep green leaves and golden fruit adding much to the beauty of the place. Although there are nearly a hundred windows in the cathedral, it is but dimly lighted, owing to its vast size, and the massive character of its columns and arches and its numerous chapels. There are forty of these chapels, arranged along the sides and ends of the cathedral, and while the grandeur of the interior makes them appear like little altars, in themselves, one of them being 60 by 80 feet and 130 feet high. So deceptive is the appearance that I could not believe the chapel was so large until I had paced its length and proved the figures to be correct.

These chapels, inclosed by high and heavy iron railings, contain many valuable paintings, silver shrines and other things of antique or historical value. In one of them is the famous San Antonio of Murillo, painted in 1656. The picture has the peculiar charm of Murillo's warm coloring, and represents the infant Savior attended by cherubs, visiting the kneeling monk-saint, Anthony of Padua. The kneeling figure of the saint was cut out of the canvas during the government disturbances of 1874, and found its way to New York, and was bought by Sohaus for $50, and by his honesty and upright dealing was returned to Seville, and placed in its original position so skillfully that the jury was not apparent. Near the main entrance, beneath the beautiful pavement of black and white marble, which alone cost $150,000 a hundred years ago, is buried Fernando, son of Christopher Columbus. The stone over his tomb is engraved with representations of the curious and quaint little ships of the great navigator who "discovered" America for us.

One evening in December we witnessed a most curious and interesting ceremony in the cathedral, being the so-called "dance of the six senses," (formerly they were six in number), which commenced at 5 o'clock. The high altar is of vast proportions, and of elaborate and artistic workmanship. In front of it are a dozen steps, and at the foot of these a platform, 20 feet wide, and as long as the steps and the altar. This platform is one step above the pavement of the cathedral.

After the service had proceeded some time, with delightful music with two organs, 10 boys in the costume of pages of the time of Philip III, with plumed hats on their heads, white stockings, and with castanets in their hands, took their places on the platform, in front of the high altar, and to the music of bass viols and violins they went through a somewhat measured and stately dance, dividing, crossing and turning in many graceful motions. Then they broke out into a pleasing and harmonious chant, which echoed through the vast and dimly lighted cathedral like a choir of angels, and a moment after, they brought their castanets into play in lively accompaniment. The effect of the youthful voices in the great space (the nave is 150 feet high) before the vast altar, brilliant with silver and gold, and glimmering in the light of many candles, the grave and graceful motion of the dancers, the kneeling multitude of men and women around the altar all made a scene of weird and impressive interest. Nor did it seem at all frivolous or trifling, though it certainly was a novelty to the stranger. The ceremony is of great antiquity, and Seville is the only place in the world where it is performed. It is reported that some straight-headed people tried to have the ceremony abolished a couple of hundred years ago, and appealed to the pope, who sent an emissary here to witness the affair and report. The emissary was so much pleased with the contents, that he reported it advisable to abolish the performance when the costumes of the senses were worn out.

This satisfied all parties for the time being, while the advocates of the ceremony have taken such care of the costumes, replacing the worn parts from time to time with new material, that they seem likely under such management to last forever. People of other and more puritanical creeds may think little or lightly of this ceremony, and it might seem out of place in a little country church, with its gloomy limits and surroundings; but while churches of all creeds were trying to express their joy at the approaching Christmas season, that joy was both beautifully expressed and enacted in the grand cathedral of Seville.

The popular promenade and drive of Seville is called the Paseo, or Las Delicias, where, on the afternoon of a Sunday or a holiday, the rank and fashion are on exhibition, and there can be seen as fine horses and carriages, as handsome ladies and as pretty and elegantly dressed children as can be found in any place in the world. The drive for half a mile runs beside the grounds of the Duke of Montpensier, and is bounded by an iron fence and a compact row of orange trees for the whole distance.

There is a space for horseback riders, one for carriages and a broad promenade, with rows of trees between them. Among the people driving almost every afternoon is ex Queen Isabel, sometimes with 10 mounted guards, and at other times unattended. The people seem to pay little respect to her, and I saw one distinguished looking gentleman deliberately look the other way when passing her, and then some fine young ladies on the sidewalk saluted her with courtesy as she passed by. She dresses elegantly, but sets a bad example to her country women by wearing a hat, for their fashion of going without hats is most becoming, and in such a climate far preferable. But the ex-queen isn't calculated to "set the fashions," as she must pull the scales at 250.

At the outer end of the drive, are several small parks and gardens, planted with orange trees, palms and pomegranates, and at some cafes the country people gather to participate in the characteristic Spanish dance. The girls are generally dressed in pink, bareheaded, with flowers in their abundant black hair. They gather in groups, with their beaux, by the wayside, in front of a cafe, or on the flat roofs of the houses, and start a dance at short notice. Generally only one or two couples dance at a time. Some young lady plays on a tamborine, another sings a monotonous tune, others pat their hands, and the lady dancer has castanets on her fingers which she plays as she dances. They dance about as much with their feet, always keeping their arms swing over their heads and never their sides. The gentlemen and lady never touch each other, and they are very near it, and swing times and take steps in unison. It is such a delightful climate, with such charming surroundings, one of those groups of happy dancers forms a picture that only the pencil of the artist can fitly portray.

The products of used-up and worn-out principles of the human body, retained in the blood to poison the nervous system, that its functions or duties will be arrested the brain will cease to take cognizance of surrounding persons and objects, consciousness will be obliterated, the vital act will become congested, the heart and lungs will cease to perform their part in the phenomena of life—they stop. Ere this, however, the most terrible form of all human suffering is apt to take place, and give an additional horror to the hour of death. If the offices of the kidneys be so essential to life, that it must cease soon after they cease to act, the conclusion is inescapable that any deviation from the performance of these offices must be attended with derangement of health. The urine is the separating agent eliminated from the blood by the kidneys—the channel by which morbid agents are carried out of a general circulation, and the blood preserved in healthy quantity and quality. If it fails to do this, disease follows as a necessary sequence. To preserve health it is necessary to preserve a healthy condition of the kidneys. Of course is attained by temperance in all relations of life, diet, clothing, exercise, and to-day I have not a so or spot on my person, and my weight is 217 pounds, being more than I ever was. I do not wish you to publish my name, but you may show this letter as who doubt the merit of S. S. S. for I know it is a sure cure.

When we recall the offices of the kidneys, that of removing the worn-out tissue elements from the blood—it is easy to understand how they may become diseased. Acrid and acid conditions of the blood, very fatal to the kidneys, are caused by the use of various forms of kidney medicine, such as Druggists, Bright's Disease, in which albumen, or the element of curd food, is excreted with the white of an egg, is tried off in the urine, causing emaciation and untimely death. We all know how irritable these diseases are; that heretofore they have, in a large percentage of cases, proved fatal. Medical science is very much at sea as to their management. What a desire for a remedy that will give tone to the kidneys, build up the blood, destroy its acid character, and cure the various ailments by them in their progress. It seems to be a plan to have been recently called by several physicians to Hunt's Kidney, a Kidney medicine which has a decided value, or it is designed. It is an active diuretic, giving the secretions of the kidneys to more normal conditions, and it is a remedy that will readily drain out the waste from the limbs and abdomen. In Diabetes it causes the appetite, and other a benefit the system.—New York Medical and Surgical Journal.

REMARKABLE!

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Sept. 20, 1882.

I think it a duty owe to humanity to say what your remedy has done for me. One year ago I contracted a bad case of Blood Pitt, and not knowing the result of such a trouble, I allowed it to run to some extent, but finally applied to the best physician in this city, who treated me for six months. In that time I took over 600 pills of PROCTER'S MERCURY & GRAIN EXTRACT, and had run down in weight from 210 to 157 pounds, and was confined to my bed with Mercurial Rheumatism, scarcely able to turn myself over. Being a traveling man, some of the fraternity found me in this deplorable condition, and recommended me to try your S. S. S. I was a new case, and I was cured by its use. I commend the use of it with very little faith any less than three weeks was able to take my place on the road. The sores and copper-colored spots gradually disappeared, and to-day I have not a so or spot on my person, and my weight is 217 pounds, being more than I ever was. I do not wish you to publish my name, but you may show this letter as who doubt the merit of S. S. S. for I know it is a sure cure.

Yours Truly, J. H. B.

Some thirty years ago there lived in Montego Bay, Ala., a young man, who was terribly afflicted. After being treated for a long time by the best professional men of that town with no effect he commenced taking S. S. S. After persistently taking it two months he was cured. Being so long a sufferer from the disease he never returned. J. W. Butler, J. P., Hot Springs Ark.

If you doubt, come to see us, and we will CURE YOU, or charge nothing! Write for particulars and a copy of the little book, "Message to the Unfortunate Suffering." Ask any Druggist a sample.

$21.00 Reward will be paid to any chemist who will find, on analysis of 100 bottles of S. S. S., one particle of Mercury, Iodide of Potassium, or other Mineral substance. SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., Proprietors, Atlanta, Ga.

Price of Small Size, 25¢. Price of Large Size, 50¢. Sold by all Druggists.
