Fresh of Atlantic. A New York and Jersey City ferry boat which had run up at the wharf, with the pilot, engineer and crew asleep, was suddenly found to be in motion. The pilot and engineer rushed down to the engine room. There, with his hand upon the lever, stood a young man bareheaded and barefooted, in a shirt and pair of trousers. "What are you doing?" said the pilot. "I know what I am doing. I am working this ferryboat," said the stranger angrily as he clung to the lever. Two deck hands by this time rushed forward to seize the man. He struggled fiercely. The boat had moved nearly out of the slip, but the walking beam had got caught on its center, and the wheels were motionless. "You'll have to help us," said the dock hands, "we can't handle this man alone." The pilot and engineer caught hold, but with the strength of a wild beast he tore from them, and springing through the door, ran to the end of the ferryboat and sprang into the river. After a few seconds the man rose to the surface and two men ran for a boat and rowed out in the wake of the swimmer. At last he allowed them to lift him into the boat, remarking, "I suppose I must go." The man was John A. McGraw, a watchman in the Central railroad gas house. McGraw's brother, also a watchman at the gas works, came to relieve him. He found the light burning in the watchman's room, and a note from his brother as follows: "Joe! Don't come into this gas house. If you do, you will get blown up." McGraw must have had unusual cunning, for he unfastened the chains, removed the hawser, and started up the engine as well as the most experienced man could have done it, though he had never handled an engine before. He said he was impelled by the devil to run the boat. The ferrymen attributed his insanity to his having inhaled illuminating gas at the works.

LIFE IN TENNESSEE.

A Sample Colonel and His Righteous Indignation. Not long since a drummer, who was detained for a few days in the town of Lebanon, Tenn., gave us an account of how he amused himself while he was there. The look of his grip sack needed repairs, and he took it to a gunsmith to have it repaired. The drummer was sitting behind the counter, when a leading citizen entered with a gun, which he threw down on the counter with great indignation.

"What do you mean by giving me this kind a gun when I go out for a little shooting?" demanded the leading citizen.

"Why, colonel, that gun is the newest patent breech-loader," replied the gunsmith.

"Then you powder is no account." "Colonel, I got the gun myself, and I put in the best powder in the shop."

"Well, all I know I had to shoot twice at Major McPelter before he keeled over. That's the only time I've failed to bring down my man with the first barrel. I killed my brother-in-law, Judge Smith, and his nephew, Sam Randle, at one shot at seventy-five yards. I am sure I hit him the first shot, but I think there wasn't powder enough in the gun to drive the bullets through his body."

"I wish you would count the bullet holes, because, you see, Colonel, you are known as a good shot, and it will look like a reflection on me and my gun. It is well calculated to injure me with my customers, who are the best people in the town. I tell you what I wish you would do, colonel. I wish you would give this gun another trial."

The colonel rubbed his chin and replied: "I would like to do it for my own satisfaction, but I can't remember just now of anybody having insulted me lately. I haven't got a living man to shoot." Major McPelter was the last man upon the list. I wish somebody would dispute my word. Perhaps you feel touched by something I may have said."

"Oh, no, colonel, you are right about the gun," responded the gunsmith.

"I thought perhaps you had found something personal in my remarks about the gun."

"Not a bit of it."

"Then perhaps you have some enemy who has been exasperating you. If so," said the colonel, putting a cartridge in the gun, "I will try the gun before I go to the inquest."

The gunsmith pondered over the proposition and finally said: "I wish I hadn't shot my rival gunsmith out the way day before yesterday. He would have come in handy now if he hadn't died, poor fellow, just when he did. I might insult Bill Tompkins and shoot him, but he gets his ammunition here, and always pays for it, so it don't look quite right to shoot him off-hand."

The two men were very much puzzled how to find a victim. They suggested several names, but there seemed to be some good reason why each and every one of them should not be sacrificed.

At once the drummer saw the gunsmith wink at the colonel, and point with his thumb behind the counter in his direction. Before the colonel could catch on, the terrified drummer slid out through the side door, and made good his escape.

This is the story the drummer told us, and from which we read in Tennessee papers about shooting scrapes, we believe every word of it. If our correspondent is spared to come to Texas, his life will be safer than it has been for a long time.

DIED IN HYDROPHOBIA.

A Little Boy Succumbs to the Effects of a Bite Inflicted Nearly Three Years Ago.

New York Herald. Frederick Berger, 8 years, 11 months and 13 days old, died at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon at his home, No. 743 E. tenth avenue. Dr. J. L. Turner, of No. 233 West Forty-eight street, yesterday filed a certificate with the health authorities stating that the lad's death was due to hydrophobia. The certificate was accompanied by a letter written by the physician, furnishing some further particulars concerning the case. The health officials were anxious that a post mortem examination should be made on the dead boy's body but when Dr. Turner said there was not the slightest doubt that death was due to the disease given, and as the lad's parents opposed the mutilation of the remains, a permit was issued for the interment of the body to-day in the Lutheran cemetery. John Berger, a wood-turner, with his wife and four children, has for some months past rented apartments on the third floor of the frame house No. 743 Eleventh avenue.

Frederick, a bright and intelligent boy, was the oldest of the children. On Tuesday of last week he complained of feeling ill. His mother, thinking that he was only suffering from a cold, applied home remedies, but without effect. As he continued to grow worse, on Friday afternoon Dr. Turner was called in. Upon making an examination the physician became convinced that Frederick was suffering from some unusual and dangerous disease. There was a perceptible tremulousness of all the muscles, but not such as is seen in cases of tetanus or spotted fever. The boy was then in a high state of nervousness and easily frightened.

CHARACTERISTIC SYMPTOMS. By Saturday morning fever developed, and the temperature increased until it reached 104 degrees. With the fever came a spasmodic action of the larynx and a slight contraction of the muscles of the neck and a dryness and constriction in the throat. Also an excessive thirst, but an aversion for and a horror at the sight of fluids. Dr. Turner was then able to make a conclusive diagnosis. He was convinced by these symptoms that the boy was suffering from hydrophobia. All the known remedies were resorted to, but notwithstanding all efforts the disease developed and convulsions ensued. The slight convulsions threw the sufferer into a state of great nervous irritability. There was also noted frothing at the mouth, and an occasional grinding of the teeth. The temperature continued to increase, and on Saturday night it reached the highest point—106 degrees. Little Frederick was by this time greatly exhausted, and the physician was then convinced that in a few hours the struggle would be over. Although the boy apparently suffered no acute pains, he rapidly wasted away, and at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon died.

BITTEN NEARLY THREE YEARS AGO. The parents for a time could not remember that their son had been bitten by a rabid animal, but when more closely questioned they recalled that two years and nine months ago, while the family were living at Newark, N. J., Frederick, while playing with a pet spitz dog, was bitten on the hand. The animal was sick at the time, and after lacerating the child's hand was killed. A common linseed plaster was applied to the wound, which healed in a few days, and as the boy never complained of the injury, it was never thought of after until his death. The health physicians were surprised that the poisonous saliva from the dog's teeth should have lurked in the boy's system for such a long time.

Childhood, Manhood, and Hoary Age. Claim in union, "Behold the Conqueror." During a brief visit to the ancient town of Warwick, R. I., recently, our agent extended his trip to the southeastern extremity of the town, to look about among the wonderful improvements which have been made in the appearance of Warwick Neck during a comparatively brief period, and while conversing on this subject with Col. Benjamin S. Hazard, the proprietor of the Warwick Neck Hotel, he has related the greater part of the handsome residences had been erected inside of a dozen years; and he also learned that Col. Hazard had been a great sufferer from a chronic disease of the Kidney and Bladder over fifteen years, the most painful form of it being a stoppage or retention of the urine, which was so very severe at times as to disable him from his accustomed work, and even confine him to the bed, when a surgeon's assistance would be required to relieve him. He was being doctored a large part of the time, but could get no permanent relief. At times his sufferings were terrible from sharp, cutting pains through the Kidney and Bladder, and he had suffered so long and so severely that he had become discouraged of getting well again, especially as the doctor stated that it was doubtful if a man of his age, with such a complicated disease of long standing, could be cured. But last summer, when he was suffering intensely from one of these attacks, a gentleman who was boarding at his hotel, urged and persuaded him to try a bottle of Hunt's Remedy, as he had known of some wonderful cures effected by it.

Mr. Hazard says he had no faith in it, but consented reluctantly to try it; and after taking it only two days, the intense pains and aches had disappeared, and he commenced to gain strength rapidly, and in less than a week was attending to his accustomed work, and has never had a return of the pain. Mr. Hazard is over seventy years of age, and on the 25th of Nov. 1882, when our agent met him, although it was a very cold and blustering day, he was in his belt with his team at work pulling and loading troops, as hale and hearty a man as you could wish to see.

August he was unable to stand up to oversee the work then going on in this same field. Hunt's Remedy had given him health and strength again, and he recommends it to his relatives and friends, several of whom are now taking it, as he considers it a most excellent medicine for all diseases of the Kidney and Bladder.
