HOW TO MAKE JELLY.
The Secrets of the Business Explained in Detail.

There was a great deal of weather yesterday; in fact the weather was very much so, and a Globe Democrat reporter, who has a great liking for raspberry jam, but whose boarding house lady never gives him any, thought he would sweeten his temper by a visit to one of the establishments where this delicacy is manufactured.

At the first place visited the proprietors were out, sampling the weather; but a clerk was present who appeared to know all about the business, and he seemed anxious to talk. He told the reporter of some wonderful things. No less than a dozen kinds of domestic and tropical fruits were used, and these were continually kept in stock. By some process, which remains a secret, strawberries, or the most delicate of fruits, could be kept for a year or more, without losing any of their original flavor. Nothing but fruit and sugar were used, and the most fastidious and accomplished housewife would find nothing in their establishment to which the smallest exception could be taken.

"Will you let me go through your workrooms and see how the thing is done?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, no!" replied the clerk, hastily; "we are not running our full force to-day, and the works are not in good order. Come around some other time."

"Very well," said the reporter, meekly, and he went on his way to another establishment.

At one of the largest jelly manufacturing places in the city he was taken in out of the weather and made welcome.

"So you want to know how jelly is made, do you?" said the adipose and jelly proprietor. "Well, it isn't made just as people suppose it is; but then, after all, there's nothing so dreadful about it that we should wish to hide it. Just come with me and I'll show you all over the place."

He led the way from the office to the engine and boiler room, where a small engine of about four-horse power generates the steaming of the fruit and the power for the churning of the mince meat, in which the firm does a large business. From thence the party passed into the cooking room, where the whole process of jelly-making was in full blast. The basis of all "store" jellies is apples. These are neither pared nor cored, but are chopped into small pieces and put through an evaporating process which leaves all their essential qualities, and makes it possible to keep them for any length of time. When needed for jellies they are thrown into a vat of boiling water and boiled with sugar for the proper length of time; the liquid is then drained off, mixed with an equal quantity of glucose, and flavored with extracts to make "currant," "quince," or any other kind of jelly that may be desired. The residue of the apples is used in making apple butter.

"Where do your fruits come in?" inquired the reporter.

"Oh," said the manufacturer of sweet goods, "we don't use any genuine fruits in our jellies, except the fruit basis of apples. Why just think of it! we make 5,000 pounds of currant jelly every day. Where could we get all the currants from? There are not enough raised in the United States to keep us going. Don't believe any one who tells you they use the original fruits in their jellies. They don't do it. But these goods are perfectly wholesome. I use them in my own family. They save housewives a great deal of labor, and are a great blessing to poor people. Come and see how they are put up."

The reporter noticed that into each of the glass jars about a teaspoonful of a colorless fluid was poured before they were filled with jelly. "What is that?" he asked.

"Ah!" replied the proprietor, smiling; "you mustn't ask me just what it is. It is an acid, put in to harden the jelly. It may be carbolic acid, or it may be tartaric acid. That is one of our secrets. But I assure you it is perfectly harmless. It is put in to harden the jelly. See! and he picked up a glass that had been filled less than a minute before, and turned it upside down. What had just been a limpid fluid had become a solid mass.

Jellies for city use are packed in buckets, and those for the country are put up in small cans, or jars, tin and glass.

Five years ago there was but one canned goods factory west of the Mississippi river. Now there are a dozen, of which eight are in St. Louis. The business is a growing one, and bids fair to increase, as St. Louis is in the center of a fine fruit growing region. It furnishes employment to a large number of hands, especially in the fall season. For the past year the jelly manufacturers have been cutting prices down each other, and competition has been so brisk as to make away nearly all the profits of the business, but the matter was settled not long ago, by a mutual agreement between the manufacturers to maintain equal rates. Most of the goods canned in this city go to Colorado, which consumes more canned goods than any other State in the Union.

HEAVY LIFE INSURANCE.
The Biggest Individual Insurance in the West.

The Chicago Tribune of the 30th ult., contains the following in reference to the large amount of life insurance carried by Mr. J. V. Farwell, of that city, who is in fact the most heavily insured man in the west. This gentleman is at the head of the great dry goods house of J. V. Farwell & Co., and is well known throughout the west on account of his prominence in charitable and religious matters. To a reporter Mr. F. stated that he took his insurance simply as a business investment, and he thought it a wise thing for everybody to be insured. His indorsement of life insurance can not but have great weight with those who are investigating the subject. The Tribune says:

Mr. John V. Farwell, who for years has carried a large amount of insurance on his life, yesterday effected an additional insurance to the amount of $100,000. His previous insurance aggregated $123,000 which with that written yesterday makes a total of $223,000. This is believed to be the largest individual insurance carried in the west, though in Chicago alone, where life insurance investments are very popular, there are probably twenty individuals insured for $100,000 and over. The best informed persons believe there are at least 200 Chicago business men insured for $50,000 and upwards, and nearly 1,000 carrying $20,000 or more. So common has the custom of insurance become, especially among people in trade, that it is now no easy matter to find one, if insurable, who is not insured.

Mr. Farwell's insurance was the subject of no little comment in life insurance circles yesterday, and the air is full of rumors of large amounts soon to be written.

Among the prominent men of eastern cities who carry large amounts of insurance we will name Cyrus W. Field, of New York, who has $250,000; F. B. Roberts, New York, $200,000; Charles Pratte, Brooklyn, $200,000; Alexander Barrett, New York, $200,000; F. W. DeVoe, New York, $245,000; Pierre Lorillard, New York, $255,000; James Park, Jr., Pittsburgh, $300,000; W. H. Dangle, Gallopolis, Mo., $300,000; Charles M. Rank, Allentown, Pa., $200,000; G. K. Anderson, Titusville, Pa., $215,000.

Two Enterprises.
Wall Street Daily News.
"So you would marry Ethel?" demanded the father, as he wheeled around to face the trembling lover.
"Yes, sir."
"And you have money in the bank—real estate—bonds—stocks, say $75,000 worth?"
"N-no, sir, but I can work up. I—I am bound to win, sir."
"How?"
"I shall go to Florida, buy 100 acres of land, raise 5,000,000 oranges per year for the market, and in ten years I shall be rich."
"Hum! Yes! Hum!" growled the old man. "Very enterprising—very good opening, young man!"
"Y yes, sir!"
"I have an enterprise on hand as well. Ethel will marry a Buffalo widower this spring. He is consumptive. He won't live two years. He will leave her $200,000. Go hence! Go to Europe for three years. That will kill him, bury him, and give her a year to wear weeds and get over her grief. Then she's yours, cash and all, and I will put my hand on your head and bless you!"
"The young man left the house he didn't seem to believe it."

A Hard Witness.
Utica Observer.
"Do you know the prisoner well?" asked the attorney.
"Never knew him sir," replied the witness.
"No levity," said the lawyer sternly.
"Now, sir, did you ever see the prisoner at the bar?"
"Took many a drink with him at the bar."
"Answer my question, sir," yelled the lawyer. "How long have you known the prisoner?"
"From two feet up five feet ten inches."
"Will the court see the—"
"I have, Judge," as the witness, anticipating the lawyer, "I have answered the question. I knowed the prisoner when he was boy two foot long and a man five feet ten."
"Your honor—"
"It's fact, Judge, a under oath," persisted the witness.
The lawyer arose, and both hands on the table in front of him, spread his long arms, and his body over the table and said:
"Will you tell the court what you know about this case?"
"That ain't his case," replied the witness.
"What ain't his case?"
"Case!"
"Who said it w?"
"You did. You wanted to know what I knew ab this case. His name's Smith."
"Your honor," wled the attorney, pinching his eye out by the roots, "will you make some answer?"
"Witness," as the judge, "you must answer questions put to you."
"Land o' God, Judge, hain't I been doin' it! the blamed case fire away. I'm ready."
"Then," said the lawyer, "don't boat about the h any more. You and the prisoner are friends?"
"Never," pttly responded the witness.
"What? We you summoned summoned her a friend?"
"No, sir; I summoned here as a Presbyterian one of us was ever Friends. s's an old line Baptist, without drop of Rnaker in him."
"Stand do," yelled the lawyer in disgust.
"Hey!"
"Stand do!"
"Can't do. I'll sit down or stand up—"
"Sheriff, r the man from the man from the—"
"Witness," as, muttering, "Well, if he ain't the head-deadest case I ever laid eye."
