yet brought forward, is more popular. There are good reasons for McDonald's popularity. He belongs to the best grade of the public men of the old school. He is simple and most democratic in his manners, without aping the humility of a demagogue. His record as a senator is a strong, not a brilliant one. No one would ever call him an orator, but as a speaker he is very clear. He is gifted with a strong fund of common sense, and as he is a trained and well skilled lawyer, his speeches have always been

She was a tall, slight brunette, ever active and nervous. Constant change was necessary to her happiness. Her health was frail. Death had already marked her for his own. The father knew this, and carefully concealed this knowledge from the daughter. He never opposed her wishes in anything. He was her humble, devoted slave. He was a member of the senarguments for a private hearing he would say: "I can only listen to you at the committee room;" and to this line of policy he rigidly adhered.

Once, when the Thurman act was pending between the transfer of the pending between the committee of the pending between the pending between the pending the p pending before the senate judiciary committee, Jay Gould tried his hand upon McDwald. The latter came into his rooms on Fourteenth street one day, and found a small black whiskered man coiled up in his easiest chair before the open coal fire. The small man arose easily, as he said: "You are Senator McDouald, I presume?"

"Yes," said McDonald, still stand ing. My name is Jay Gould, of New York," said the caller. "Ah. "You are a member of the senate judiclary committee?" "I am "I have very heavy interests pending before your committee," said Gould. Then, with the sinister grin of a man used to talking to the rural members of the Albany legislature, he said very slowly: "I have come to see you about them." McDonald stiffened at the tone and manner of Gould. He said, sternly: 'Mr. Gould, you cannot see or talk to me upon the subject of the Union Pacific Interests except in the judielary committee room and before the Gould burst into an impatient laugh, as if this were a bid for a higher price, and began going over what he wanted done. McDonald only listened for a moment, then he grabbed his hat as he said: "Mr. Gould, I am going out of the room if I cannot stoy you in any other way. You should go, but I am not in the habit of ordering callers out. But if you do not I shall be obliged to."

Gould saw the senator was in earnest and went out. It was his first and only interview with McDonald.

The social ambition and Ill-temper of Mrs. Hendricks brought about several years ago an open rupture between McDonald and Hendricks, This break has had a marked effect on the politics of the state of Indiana. Had these two gentlemen been united the democrats believe Indiana could have been carried in the last election. Mrs. Hendricks has always been displeased at the great popularity of the present Mrs. McDonald. Before her marriage with the senator Mrs. Hendricks was estisfied that she herself held a superfor position.
