FAY'S FATE.

Instead of Being Hung He Gets Only Ten Years in the Pen.

A Small Penalty for a Brutal Murder.

What is known as the Fay murder trial has come to a close. The bloody affray occurred at Carroll last fall, and the particulars as brought out by the witnesses indicated a very brutal murder. Fay kept a saloon there and Maher, his victim, handled freight to and from the depot. Maher had delivered some kegs of beer to Fay, and stepping into the saloon he asked Fay to either pay the freight or step down to the office and sign the book. Fay declared he would do neither, and as Maher insisted Fay invited him to step outside and they would see who was the best man. Maher agreed and started to open the screen door leading outside. He remarked "I can't open it," and Fay replied that he would open it, and as he started from behind the bar to do so the witnesses saw him make the motions as if opening a clasp knife. As Fay neared Maher, it is thought that the latter saw the knife in his hand, for he sort of started back and threw up one hand, and in doing so his hand just touched Fay's breast. Fay at once struck at him with the knife, cutting down through his hat, and besides a scalp wound, nearly severed one of Maher's ears. Maher stepped back and Fay struck again, cutting him over one eye, and then as Maher stepped back, Fay made a lunge and stabbed him in the abdomen, at which point Maher fell to the ground, the effect of which he soon after died. The witnesses claimed that each time Fay struck his victim he gave a demoniacal yell, and seemed more like a wild beast than a human being. After being arrested Fay admitted that he had two rows with Maher before, and remarked that the third time was always "the charm" and he expected it would come to this. When told of his victim's death he remarked that he expected that it was all up with him, too, and in other ways seemed to feel that he had committed an out and out murder and that he had made some preparation for this bloody meeting, indicating cool premeditation.

About the only attempt that could be made in his behalf was that of convincing the judge and jury that he did the act in an almost insane moment, in the heat of passion, and the attempt to excite sympathy, not merely for himself, but for his wife and three children, who appeared in court, and who made a rather favorable impression by their manner and mien. The widow of the murdered man was also in court with her two children, and no little sympathy was felt for them. District Attorney Connors prosecuted the case and Colonel Dailley defended. The jury were nearly unanimously in favor of finding the prisoner guilty of murder in the first degree, but one protested so strongly that as a last resort they agreed on a verdict finding him guilty in the second degree, and recommended him to the clemency of the court. Judge Reed sentenced him to ten years in the penitentiary, the lightest penalty that could be given him.

He was naturally much pleased at getting off so lightly, and will probably be content to let the case go rest without making any attempt to secure a new trial.

Fay is represented as a man of violent passions, and when under the influence of drink to be uncontrollable. He may well congratulate himself on having a little longer lease of life, in view of the terrible crime he committed.

AN ESCAPEE.

How a Mere Boy Played It On the Chief of Police.

Julius Newman, a mere boy, who was arrested on complaint of his mother, who could do nothing with him, proved a little too sharp for the chief of police. The boy, it seems, has a passion for running away from home and has been roaming about in Nebraska and has been in jail in Omaha, besides getting into much other trouble. His mother apprenticed him to a cabinet maker, and while the boy seemed quick to learn and willing to work, yet he would not stay content, and ran away again. Then the mother concluded the only way was to send him to the reform school, and so he found the boy by sight, and on asking him what he was doing there, received from the boy's lips a long and touching story of how Marshal Jackson had sent him up there to see about some boys who had stolen his blacking brushes, the little fellow pretending to be a boot black. The boy cried so and played his part so well that the chief told him to go and prepare to take his brushes, and make them give up the same, and if they wouldn't they should be arrested. The boy started off, and a little later in the afternoon when Judge Anglesworth sent down to have the boy brought into court, it was discovered that the boy was not at large, and will probably keep away from Council Bluffs for a time.

Contest Over a Cow. There was a lively contest in Jus Hoe Vaughan's court Saturday over the possession of a cow. It appeared that in November last Mrs. Jane Richardson, who owned the cow, gave a chattel mortgage on the same to M. J. Kelley. The notary failed to acknowledge the same, but it was placed on record. Mr. Filbert's short time ago attached the cow, and now Kelly seeks to replevin the property. In the meantime, on the 23d of April, the mortgage was recorded a second time, the notary acknowledging it in due form, but dating it back to last November. There was quite a tangle of legal points for the lawyers to talk over, and the decision is held back for a day or two, while the justice takes time to think it over.

For window shades, wall paper, and paints go to P. C. Miller's, No. 20 north Main st.

Those desiring big bargains in furniture or stoves, call at A. J. Mandel's, 325 Broadway.

The Catholic Mission. The mission announced to be held in the Catholic church under the direction of Rev. Father O'Shea, who was here about a year ago, and who had such a successful work there. The church yesterday was filled to overflowing, and arrangements were made by which the mission is to continue two weeks, Rev. Fathers Cook and Henry joining in the same. There are to be two masses followed by sermons every morning this week, one at 5 o'clock, the other at 8 o'clock. There will also be a service over evening at 7:30 o'clock for the ladies and next week the evening will be for the men. A children's mission is also to be held, the services being at 11 o'clock in the morning and 3:30 even, afternoon.

Mrs. W. H. Almy will clean 14 gloves at 15 cents a pair at 212 Broadway.

A Still Fire. Brown & Young were surprised Saturday morning to find that their slaughter house, on the creek below Orvis' packing house, was burned to the ground. Just how or when it burned no one seems to know, but it probably went in the night sometime, as there was slaughtering being done there the day before. There has been no fire about the place, so it naturally seems to have been caused by incendiarism. The building and tools were valued at about $200, and there was some $200 worth of beef roasted also.

The Monitor oil stove never fails to give satisfaction. Cooper & McGee have them, 41 Main street.
