FREMONT'S SENSATION.

A Supposed Train Robber Shot and Killed by the Sheriff.

A Deputy Fatally Wounded by the Desperado.

A Prospect of a Hanging Party by Judge Lynch.

Two men arrived at Fremont from Bell Creek about 11:15 a. m. yesterday. They were suspicious looking characters and were followed to that place by some Bell Creek citizens. They were suspected of being train robbers from Lyons, Iowa. The citizens of Bell Creek telegraphed to Sheriff Gregg, of Fremont, to be at the depot when the train arrived and take charge of them, and he deputized some of the citizens to assist him. They met the robbers at the train and told them that they were their prisoners, upon which one of the strangers drew a revolver and fired, the ball taking effect, striking Mr. Moore in the month, and coming out at the right side of the lower part of the neck, inflicting what is feared to be a fatal wound.

The excitement was intense, and a mob was almost inevitable. The streets were crowded with people, and dozens of guns and revolvers were in sight. "Hang him!" and "Shoot him!" was heard in every direction. By great effort and precaution, the mayor of the city and other parties succeeded in taking him to the jail. The mob had not dispersed at a late hour. In a few minutes they arrived with the body of the dead man, and this quieted the crowd somewhat. The prisoner's name was George Swain, from Salem, Mass., age 27 years. He had a smooth face, with black mustache; has a wife and one child, a boy, living in Salem, Mass. He is a printer by trade. He claims he did not know the other party whom he was traveling with, and that he met him yesterday at the Bluffs. He also claims that he did none of the shooting. He is greatly excited, and very much scared. That there should be no violence, a heavy guard was placed around the jail last night.

Mr. E. L. Moore is reported very dangerously wounded. One of the physicians says he cannot recover. Should he die soon it will be impossible to restrain the mob from breaking open the jail and hanging the prisoner. The sheriff killed the man that shot Mr. Moore, though some claim that the prisoner is the one who shot him.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

The Subject Discussed by a Learned Scholar.

Who Leans Slightly to the Side of Capital.

The Rt. Rev. James O'Connor delivered a lecture at St. Paulomena's Cathedral Wednesday, to a large audience and a most intelligent and appreciative one. The lecture was for the benefit of the Union Catholic Library association, under whose auspices it was given and was in a degree connected with the lecture on "Socialism," delivered some months ago, the subject of this time being "Labor and Capital."
Bishop O'Connor is recognized as one of the most intelligent men and soundest scholars in the country, and hence his views on this subject were anxiously looked forward to.
The speaker began by saying that the theory that capital is the most fruitful source of poverty and crime, is one accepted both by the communist and socialist. "Capitalists," they tell us, "are a class who reap where they have not sown; who live in idleness and luxury, corrupting themselves and all around them. They are parasites, drawing life and sustenance from society without giving it anything in return, extortioners and robbers, who in a thousand ways despoil the laborer of the fruit of his toil and doom him to a life of want and suffering." These are the charges against capital which socialistic writers and orators make, and they seldom fail to attract and excite a large following. But does the capitalist merit the opprobrious epithets heaped upon him? Is it true that he is frequently an extortioner, but is he necessarily so, is he so because he is a capitalist? It would seem absurd to say so. And if it is wrong to accuse wealth, where does the sin begin? Is it at fifty or a hundred thousand, at a million or ten million dollars? Referring to the danger of a concentration of capital in the hands of a few individuals.

The speaker thought such apprehension need not be felt in our day, as capital was more generally distributed now than formerly. "To the slaves and serfs of former days has succeeded a numerous and well-to-do middle class of comparatively recent growth. With a population of more than fifty millions, we have in this country perhaps a dozen men of colossal fortunes, who certainly have great power for evil as well as for good. But there is no reason to fear them. Their wealth is not locked up in vaults, but is invested where it benefits the masses; and as they are but mortal, it will upon their death be divided among others, and in the majority of cases will be spent in far less time than it has taken to accumulate it.
Great railroad companies and corporations representing as they do millions and sometimes hundreds of millions of dollars, are true, use the power they possess to the injury of individuals or of the smaller corporations; but this, it seems to me, must be the exception, not the rule, and those who are thus injured are few in comparison to the vast number benefited by these bodies. It is in the interest, as well as in the duty, of these companies to deal fairly with the public. If there be ought in their management.

TO OPRESS THE MASSES.

The remedies lie with the representatives of the people or with the courts. Labor is indeed a source of wealth and culture, but it is not the only one. There are many others. In the case under consideration there are ordinarily three—capital, directing skill and labor.

COMMON LABOR.

is easily procured, and what is common and easy to be procured, is in the nature of things, cheap. Skillful labor, because more rare, commands a higher price. "But rarer than skilled labor is the intelligence that enables a man to provide the machinery, superintend its working and provide a market for its product.
A workman must live and make suitable provision for his family, and can only do so by his labor. His labor, then, is worth to him all that he can procure for it, and he can demand any compensation he may deem fit, but no one is bound to give him it, and this is where trouble arises. The right of the workmen to strike was conceded, the same as was that of a merchant to refuse to sell goods at what he might consider too low price.

THE SOLUTION.

The only feasible method proposed for a solution of the question was the speaker thought, that of arbitration, and even this was one of doubtful expediency.

THE CAPTURE OF A PASS FRAUD.

The Chicago Tribune of the 30th inst. reports the arrest of one Ray A. Potter at the instance of the Union Pacific railroad company, his methods of operation to obtain transportation and the measure of success attending his efforts, is very interesting reading for those who know the truth. The detection of the fraud practiced was not due to the astuteness of U. P. officials, but to the good judgment and cautious action of the stenographer of Mr. Holdridge, the general superintendent of the B. & M. in Nebraska. Mr. Ray A. Potter presented at Mr. Holdridge's office a request for a pass for John Barnette, from Omaha to Denver and return, purporting to be signed by Wm. Thaw, second vice president of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago railway. Mr. Holdridge being absent the letter was opened by his stenographer, whose suspicion was aroused by the two or three peculiarities in the general get up of the letter. He told Mr. Potter to call later, and telegraphed to Mr. Thaw, at Pittsburg, asking if he had made the request, and on receiving an answer in the negative, at once notified the Union Pacific people of the attempted fraud, as he thought it was likely it might have been tried with them. This notice from the B. & M. general superintendent's office was the first inkling that the U. P. headquarters people had of their being "done."

ONE WHO KNOWS.

A PASS FIEND.

A Young Man Who Was Too Handy With His Pen.

And Was Captured by Sheriff Miller for Forgery.

From the Chicago Tribune of Wednesday it is learned that a clever young man named Ray A. Potter, formerly a respectable clerk in the employ of the New England transportation company, the son of highly respectable parents, and the husband of an accomplished young lady, was arrested by the Chicago avenue police at a late hour Monday evening and placed in a cell at that station. The arrest was the result of the combined efforts of an Omaha representative of the Union Pacific railroad, Sheriff Dave Miller, of Omaha, Humphrey M. Nathan and Detectives Haas and Whalen. The indiscretion which has brought about the young man's downfall is an ability to imitate closely the signatures of railway officials, which he has exercised to best advantage in a rather unusual manner. On the 17th of the present month Potter presented himself at the office of Mr. E. L. Kimball, general manager of the Union Pacific railroad, and handed Mr. Kimball a letter written upon a Pennsylvania company's blank, and purporting to bear the signature of Mr. William Thaw, second vice president of the Pennsylvania. The letter represented that the Pennsylvania company would be under obligations to the Union Pacific if it would issue to the bearer, Geo. Barnett, and his friend, Calvin Drummond, employees of the Pennsylvania company, a pass to Red Rock, Mo. The letter was dated May 11, and bore the stamp of the second vice president of the Pennsylvania company, and the passes were issued. Two days later advice from Mr. Thaw made it appear that he had issued no such request, and a telegram sent to Columbus, Neb., caught Messrs. Barnett and Drummond on the train, and they were sent back to Omaha. There it was developed that the George Barnett who had presented the letter was not the one traveling on the pass. When an investigation was made it appeared that Barnett and Drummond had all rights that they held from Chicago, where they had been employed by the Desiring reaper works; that Potter, the scheming young man, had offered to get them transportation to Red Rock for $90, the fare being $300 for two, and that they had innocently accepted his offer.

With this as a pointer the railroad people began to look for the smooth-tongued young man, and traced him around to several of the Omaha hotels, among others the Millard, where he had registered under the alias of C. H. Conners. They then discovered that he had been to the Omaha railroad, and representing himself as H. A. Stevens, presented a letter purporting to be signed by Mr. Thaw, as in the first case, requesting transportation for "bearer, Mr. H. A. Stevens, to St. Paul. This pass was issued, and "Stevens" had gone on his way. In St. Paul he attempted to work the Manitoba road, but in some manner "got onto" him, and refused to honor Mr. Thaw's alleged request for a pass.

Last Saturday Potter returned to Chicago, and though he was carefully searched for, it was not until Monday night that he was located at No. 225 North Clark street and arrested. He had in his possession at the time of his arrest a number of letters of recommendation from various railways and transportation companies, some of which are believed to be forgeries. These letters, with the forged letters from Mr. Thaw, a number of bogus letter heads of the Pennsylvania company, and a rubber stamp bearing the inscription: "Office of Wm. Thaw, Second Vice President Pennsylvania R. Co.," which were made in Omaha, are in the hands of Mr. C. E. Gorham, the western agent of the Pennsylvania company, who will prosecute Potter for the company.

Potter is about 24 years of age, a fine looking fellow, who has been employed by the Burlington and North-western railroads and by the New England Transportation company. His parents reside at St. Joe, Mich., and he formerly boarded at No. 83 Dearborn avenue, where he met Barnett and Drummond. The two men, who were duped by him, will be brought back to testify against him. His wife is broken hearted over his arrest. He will have his preliminary examination in Chicago some time next week.
