HEADLIGHT CLEAMS.

Rumor That The Union Pacific Will Remove Its Shops, And That a Union Depot Will be Built on Ninth and Farnam.

News Which, if True, is Important For Omaha.

The most important item of news during the past week was that concerning the proposed purchase of the large tract of land west of the city, near what is known as "the Summit," on the U. P. track.

It is generally believed that the object of this purchase is to build extensive stock yards, which seems the more plausible, as the track lies between the U. P. and B. & M., where both come close together by their curves, and form a convenient shipping and receiving location for stock goods and packing houses.

One of the most prominent and well informed gentlemen in the city, however, thinks the land is to be used for an entirely different purpose. He says the Union Pacific folks have long been anxious to remove their shops from the river bottom, a treacherous location and subject to floods or the encroachment of the river. He believes that the land in question has been chosen as the new site for the shops, and that the Union Pacific company will build up a town of their own, such as the city of Pullman, near Chicago, where the Pullman car shops are in operation.

It is also rumored that negotiations are in progress and plans very nearly agreed upon for the erection of a fine union depot by all the roads, which is to be located on the present site of the Canfield House, on Ninth and Farnam. This would be the most convenient and available place in the city for such a depot, and with the yards on the river front, would make one of the greatest improvements Omaha could have.

Of course the truth of these conjectures is known only to the dignitaries of the various roads, who take their own time in perfecting their plans and making them public, but it is very pleasant to even think of the possibility of such a stride toward metropolitan improvement.

A GOOD INVESTMENT. One of our prominent business men said to us the other day: "In the spring my wife got all run down and could not eat anything; passing your store I saw a pile of Hood's Sarsaparilla in the window and I got a bottle. After she had taken it a week she had a roaring appetite, and did her everything. She took three bottles, and it was the best three dollars I ever invested." C. L. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

BROKEN BRACES.

A Thrilling Battle Fought Between a Railroad Agent and a Burglar.

A Lady Who Had Presence of Mind in an Emergency.

One of the most interesting of the many burglaries committed in this city of late was that of which Mr. C. B. Maxwell, ticket agent of the C. M. & St. P. road, was the victim Friday night.

Mr. Maxwell resides on South Eighteenth street, and about 3 o'clock yesterday was suddenly roused from his slumbers to see a man standing over him, whom he knew at once to be a burglar.

"Get out of this, you son of a gun!" said he, but instead of giving the man a chance to get out he grabbed him and was jerked out of bed in an instant by the fellow, who struggled to get away. The lights were all out and the contest was carried on in the darkness, only the forms of the two men being visible to each other. They got out of the bedroom into the dining-room, where something suddenly broke and the intruder got away, falling over chairs and tables in the parlor, running out the front door and around the back of the house into the alley. Mr. Maxwell was somewhat surprised to find that he had left in his grasp a pair of pants, when he supposed he had hold of the burglar, but on investigation found that they were his own, which the man had picked up to carry away. He had hold of the trousers, while the thief held on to the shoulder-braces with a death grip until they finally broke and he was obliged to run.

While they were tussling in the dining room Mr. Maxwell awoke and called out to her husband, "Charlie, what are you doing?" "There's a burglar in the house," was the answer. Quick as thought, instead of putting her head under the pillows and yelling "fire" as most women would do, Mrs. Maxwell said, "Hold on to him, Charlie, I'll bring your revolver in a minute." The fact was there was no revolver in the house and Mrs. Maxwell knew it, but resorted to this little subterfuge to terrify the thief, who, just at this juncture, got away from her husband and escaped.

As soon as the visitor was gone Mr. Maxwell lighted a lamp and began investigating his loss. He found his vest containing his watch, office keys, etc., missing, and also his wife's postcard, shopping bag, etc., the latter containing perhaps $4 or $5. This morning on looking down the alley the vest was found covered with mud and under it the office keys, but watch, chain and charm had been carried away.

When Mr. Maxwell asked his wife what she meant by telling him she would bring his revolver, she said "Oh, I knew you hadn't any but I thought I would make him run!"

The whole affair was one of the coolest on both sides that has been heard of, and was in reality quite a little adventure to look back to.

Without pretending to give an editorial opinion of a remedy of which we know nothing personally, we desire to ask those of our readers who are afflicted with scrofulous or other diseases of the blood, to examine and test the claims of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It comes to us with high individual endorsements, is compounded by practical druggists, and is made of materials recognized as valuable by all physicians.

STATE JOTTINGS.

The Grand Island Independent says: "The U. S. circuit court for this district, Judges Miller and Dundy presiding, decides that attorneys' fees can be legally collected in Nebraska when made a part of a contract in a note, and that the provision for such fees in addition to the lawful interest cannot in any sense be construed to make usury nor can the provision for such a fee make the note any the less negotiable. This is an important decision, inasmuch as it was generally supposed that an attorney fee could not be collected since the repeal of the attorney fee law of Nebraska."

Lincoln Journal: There is a man living just west of town under whose house it is said thirteen skunks have congregated, and he is consequently in considerable trouble. They will not come out or go away, and he doesn't dare to shoot them. Thirteen of these highly-scented animals ought to make an interesting group of summer pets.
