

SALT RHEUM.

Wonderful Cures of Salt Rheum when Physicians Hospitals and all other Means Failed.

I have been a great sufferer with Salt Rheum for thirty years, commencing on my head and face and extending over the greater part of my body. I have taken gallons of medicine for the most of different kinds, and tried good physicians, all of which did me no good, and I came to the conclusion that I could not be cured. But a friend called my attention to CUTICURA REMEDIES, that I tried and used them until my skin is perfectly smooth and I consider myself entirely cured. Yours truly, R. WILSON LOTT, ANSON, MASS.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are the greatest medicine on earth. Had the worst case Salt Rheum in this country. My mother had it twenty years, and in fact died from it. I believe CUTICURA would have saved her life. My arms, breast and head were covered for three years, which nothing relieved or cured until I used CUTICURA. Head-ache, (Blood purifier) internally, and CUTICURA Soap (the great skin cure) externally. NEWARK, O. J. W. ADAMS.

I had tried everything I had heard of in the east and west for Salt Rheum. My nose was swollen a very bad one. My face, head and some parts of my body were almost raw. Head covered with sores and scabs, suffering fearful. One very skillful physician said he would rather not treat it, and some of them think now I am only cured temporarily. I think not, for I have not a particle of Salt Rheum about me, and my case is considered wonderful. Thanks to CUTICURA REMEDIES. DEPT. ST. MASS. MRS. S. E. WHITFIELD.

A system of remedies ever compounded so thoroughly eradicate the disease for which they are intended as the CUTICURA Remedies. Many remarkable cures have come to my knowledge, and I feel safe in warranting satisfaction. If directed to the lowest, Medicine that infallibly cures Salt Rheum as CUTICURA Remedies will cure any kind of skin disease. CHAS. H. MORSE, Druggist, Proprietor Morse's Dispensary. HULLSTON, MASS.

HOW MAJ. WASSON FELL.

Three Sitzings at a Poker Table Resulting in a Loss of $5,500.

Painful Features of a Gallant Officer's Disgrace.

WASHINGTON, June 19.—The Wasson trial has been watched with keen interest here. As definite information has taken the place of surmise and gossip, the painful features of the defalcation are coming into strong light. It now appears partly from testimony and partly from private sources—that Wasson originally lost $5,000 at three sittings at poker with a company of reckless and wealthy merchants. On the first evening he had been winner to the amount of $100. After dinner it was proposed to play on the basis of $20 and an $80 limit. In less than two hours Wasson had lost $2,400.

Then came the fatal resolve to keep on in the hope of retrieving past losses by future winnings. But he only got deeper and deeper as he proceeded. The next night he lost $1,200, and at the third sitting $2,100, or $5,500 in all. Now came the fatal temptation to pay his debt at a table by what he thought would only be a temporary though forced loan. Off the public money to which he had access, he drew $24,000, and out of that sum he paid his gambling debts. In the meantime he telegraphed home for a draft for the amount lost, in full expectation that he would get the money in time to cover his embarrassment before it could be discovered. He had every reason to believe this could be done, because he had at sundry times sent home to his father more than enough to liquidate his obligations. To his dismay, however, word came that the money could not be raised.

Exposure was sure to follow. Then he concocted the falsehood that he had been robbed. The device was very clumsy, and could only have been employed by a frightened, desperate man. The falsity of the excuse was transparent, and the fact that he had recourse to such statements obliged his fellow-officers to believe he had been guilty of more serious offenses. Meantime Wasson, who has an almost quixotic sense of personal honor, was suffering all the torments of remorse, and within twelve hours after he had invented his false story, he surrendered himself voluntarily to the officers and made a clean breast of the crime. From this time on he exhibited a haughty despair which interfered with his own interest. He refused to have any counsel or to make any defense. He would not shake hands with his fellow-officers, saying he was outside the path of honor, and he refused the offer of a friend to make good the loss of money. He declared that his crime deserved the penitentiary, and there was where he was going. His actions grew so desperate that the officers in charge felt obliged to watch him closely. It was well they did so, for when by a ruse his quarters were suddenly changed, a pistol was found concealed in the bed, with which it is thought he had decided upon suicide. After the discovery of this weapon a guard was kept over him in his rooms. He bitterly resented this. At first he made no defense, but finally, on the representation of Mr. Hawkins, a prominent lawyer, that he should consider the claims of his family, he consented to take counsel and make the best of the situation. The line of defense set up was that the defalcation was a sudden act; that the prisoner intended to make the loss good, and had done so; that he surrendered himself instead of attempting to escape to Mexico, as he might have done, and his unimpeachable record as an officer.

BELKNAP.

The Past and Present of the Secretary of War.

The Story of His Disgrace.

WASHINGTON, June 17.—W. W. Belknap can often be seen in conversation with his friends in front of his office at New York avenue, the second floor. He does not look like a man who has endured shame and disgrace. His color is fresh and wholesome. His eyes are bright, and there is hardly a thread of silver in his huge, berry-colored long beard. The light reddish yellow hair, which curls so tight to the head of the ex-war secretary, shows the most the touch of advancing age; the silver gray outlines the reddish yellow. During business hours he wears a suit of dark bluish gray, snugly fitting to his figure. He always wears a silk hat, except in actual midsummer. He invariably carries with him a brown silk umbrella. He is very reserved and unassuming. He does not court notice, nor does he seek to avoid it. Of course he does not go out in general society, but he does appear to have plenty of gentlemen friends.

Belknap's manner is in marked contrast to the time when he held a cabinet office. Then he was haughty, arrogant, and overbearing in his intercourse with his underlings and casual visitors. Now he is plain and unassuming, but yet asserting himself in a many way necessary. Since he escaped impeachment by the senate through a mere technicality, only seven years ago, he has lived a correct and blameless life. So regular has he been in attending strictly to his business, and so correct in all the small requirements of an honest life, that many have been led to believe that he was a victim to circumstances, and that he was sacrificed because he could not develop his defense.

Matt Carpenter was counsel for Belknap. Mr. Coleman, who was Carpenter's law partner at that time, is now practicing law in this city. "Belknap was unquestionably an innocent man," said he, when asked about the matter to-day, "but, Lord love you, he could not prove it." "What was his real defense?" "Why, his wife got the money under the March contract. She was a dashing society leader at that time, and mixed a great deal in politics. She received the money, and Belknap knew no more about it than you." "Could not this have been shown?" "In what way? Belknap was one of these peculiar men who love their wives. He carried this peculiarity far. He loved his wife madly. The knowledge of her share in the business completely demoralized him. Then if he had desired to shield himself behind his wife's petticoats he would have made himself absolutely infamous. As a mere matter of policy he could only choose to be silent; but as a matter of fact he would have died a hundred times before he would have exposed her." Belknap is clearly living down his past misfortune. He has a well-established legal practice. He is the regular attorney of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, and is also counsel for several large western roads. In one case which he argued this spring he received a fee of $10,000. Yet he lives a lonely life. He has never separated from his wife legally, but they lead separate lives. Mrs. Belknap spends much of her time in Europe, and when she is in this country remains in Philadelphia. She comes occasionally to Washington. She is now in Europe, and will not return to this country again until next fall. She was one of the handsomest ladies who have ever graced Washington society. She has a tall, slim figure, a very easy carriage, and a face that was very attractive, with its regular features, fresh color, and bright, blue eyes. Her hair was a luxuriant sunny brown. Her manners were simple and gracious. She was one of the most popular hostesses when the Belknaps dispensed a free hospitality at their comfortable home.

Belknap frequently comes in business contact with the men who voted for his impeachment. Sherman, who noted guilty, when secretary of the treasury made decisions in Belknap's favor. Easton was the only democrat who voted not guilty, and he was influenced by his friend Conkling. Of the twenty-five who voted for him, Allison, Jones, Cameron, of Wisconsin, Ingalls, Anthony, of Nevada, Logan, and McMillan are the only men left in the senate. Gen. Grant, when he comes here, makes a point of being friendly to Belknap. He has always believed in his innocence.

SOMETHING EVERY LADY OUGHT TO KNOW.

There exists a means of securing a soft and brilliant complexion, no matter how poor it may naturally be. Hagan's Magnolia Balm is a delicate and harmless article, which instantly removes Freckles, Tan, Redness, Roughness, Eruptions, Vulgar Flushings, etc., etc. So delicate and natural are its effects that its use is not suspected by anybody. No lady has the right to present a disfigured face in society when the Magnolia Balm is sold by all druggists for 75 cents.
