Discursive Notes on the Hoteleries and Eating Houses of London and Paris.

How the Poor American is Fleeced by the Wily English Waiter With Watchful Eye.

A Glimpse of the Parisian Pauper.

Paris Correspondence St. Paul Pioneer Press.

For a week I have been in the very center of Paris, in the largest hotel of the French capital, built since Eugenie's insane war with Germany.

I have not been here long enough to learn much that is at once new and interesting, but I have met some well-known Americans, and I have made a short study of the means of living here, as compared with those of London and New York.

THE HOTELS.

The hotels of Paris are far better than those of London. In London only the small hotels are tolerable; in a large hotel there you feel as if you were in a balloon...

THE PAUPERS OF PARIS.

A traveler who wrote a book on Java devoted a whole chapter to the White Bears of Java. It consisted of five pages. "There are no white bears in Java."

You are thoroughly mad by this time, very likely, and what your rejoinder is depends on your temper and your bringing-up. Remonstrance is vain.

My RESTAURANT EXPERIENCE. In London there are only four or five really good restaurants, of the first class of which there are twenty in New York...

Mr. H. O. Dorrice, Master, Patron of Husbandry, of Maryland, says: "I tried the wonderful remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, a mare of mine, badly crippled, and a few applications restored her so soundness."

GARFUNKEL'S ROSA. A Girl of Seventeen Sues a Boy of Sixteen for Breach of Promise.

His name is Abraham Garfunkel, and he is now sixteen. Yet was sued for breach of promise, and yesterday the trial was had before Judge Nehrbas, in the city court.

Of course the dear little boy had to be sued through his father, or guardian, and Mr. Wolf Garfunkel filled both roles and the youth.

The entire Garfunkel family, consisting of father, mother and four children—two boys and two girls—were in court, and as they stood in a row before the judge formed a group that would have interested a photographer.

While rambling through the bright shops of the Palais Royale yesterday, and inspecting the jewelry and trinkets in that vast bazaar of vanished nobility which Richelieu built 250 years ago...

The boy's story under oath was that on June 30, Joseph Siegel, the girl's guardian, called after him at his father's house and meeting him in the hallway asked him to come over to his (Siegel's) house, which the boy did.

The first time he saw her, she swore, was two months ago at his elder brother's wedding. He danced with her on the occasion and never spoke to her or saw her since.

Judge Nehrbas first took up the question of the boy's age. If the girl and her friends could not prove him over sixteen, they could not hold him to his promise, even if he had made one.

On the other hand, Joseph Siegel swore that he knew Abraham Garfunkel five or six months, and that the father had told him more than once that the youth was twenty-one.

Leonard Traurig testified to like effect, and Miss Traurig herself being recalled, said she had known the youth for twenty-two and perfectly able to contract marriage. He had told her that he was in the jewelry business and had a store of his own.

Judge Nehrbas found that the boy was under age, and on that ground dismissed the complainant and gave him his liberty, whereupon there was much rejoicing among the Garfunkels and a corresponding depression of spirits on the other side.
