FORAKER'S POSITION.

But it is his opponent who has espoused the cause of virtue, and told the Germans that they must submit to a tax on their national beverage. So that this much is definitely known, viz., that Hoadly will might be preserved in alcohol for any run heavy in the large cities, and Foraker heavy in the town and rural districts. Foraker is the younger man, but is personally very popular. He is only thirtyeight, but fought a good fight in the army

Either one will make a good governor if he does not make too many promises. Hoadly will be likely to promise most, for he is most anxious to win, and has a mere exacting constituency to serve. It is tactically understood that a democratic governor and a democratic legislature will repeal the Scott tax law just enacted and many German republicans will become temporary democrats to assist that repeal. The Germans hold the power. Therefore they call the temperance people all the hard, unfeeling and uncharitable names they choose, and that right in their newspapers. The English papers do not dare voice the sentiment of those opposed to the brewers and repeat what is said about the Germans. But the republican papers are most plain spoken, and they are offending the Germans daily greatly to the harm of Foraker's chances. The Hoadly organs are dealing out taffy 1 000 greatly to th

The injustice of compelling the three men of experience to surrender their desks and their salaries to persons who are without experience is so apparent to any one that it seems scarcely credible to believe that Postmaster-General Gresham could have been consulted in the matter, or, if he was, that he was truly informed about all the time that their compensation has been CINCINNATI, July 21.—The positivists who declare that Hoadly will carry the state by so many thousands are just about matched in continuous and state by so many thousands are just about matched in continuous and save just about two grades to reach the state of the proposition again, they must rise through two grades to reach the state of the proposition again.
