MRS. SHEPARD'S HISTORY. A Life and Death Blackened With Shame and Crime.

The Scandals Which Agitated St. Louis After Her Marriage With Voullaire.

Violence and Disgrace to all Her Intimate Associates.

Philadelphia Press. ST. LOUIS, Aug. 2.—The details of the life in this city of Mrs. Shepard, who was killed by her reputed husband, a clergyman's son, in New York last Monday, are just coming to light.

Before he had been married many years his wife came into prominence as a beauty. She developed rapidly from a slender girl into a beautiful woman, with all the airs and graces that charm the other sex.

She herself was slow to fall in love, but she liked to try her powers of fascination and toyed with her victims in that skillful, coquettish way which made each man believe that he was her sole favorite.

One night in the year mentioned Voullaire invaded the Democrat office, which was then on Third street, and asked for Halliwell.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS. The Shop in Which Uncle Sam Prints Them--An Immense Establishment.

An Army of Typesetters, Press-Tenders and Bookbinders--Splendid Machinery.

San Francisco Chronicle. WASHINGTON, July 4, 1883.—Perhaps one of the most interesting objects to a visitor in Washington, and one that will repay him better than any other for the fatigue incurred by his inspection, is the great national printing and bookbinding establishment, on the corner of H and Capitol streets, which gives employment to the busy of more than 2,200 persons and which accompany the entire official printing and bookbinding of one of the greatest and most extensive governments in existence.

Since the establishment of the government printing office in 1861 there have been but four different men to occupy the position of public printer. In March, 1861, president Lincoln appointed Hon. John D. Defrees to take charge of the new office, and he occupied the position up to September 1, 1866, when president Johnson removed him and appointed Cornelius H. Wicks in his stead.

THE PRESS-ROOM. To the visitor this is perhaps the most interesting portion of the whole office. It is on the first floor of the main building and is 60x260 feet. There are sixty-one presses of various kinds and descriptions arranged in a row, and a little room for bellows and shafting.

THE SECOND FLOOR. The department of chief interest on this floor is what is called the "document-room." It occupies the H street front, immediately above the pressroom, and is said to be the largest composing-room in the world, being 360x50 feet.

THE THIRD FLOOR. This floor is entirely occupied by the bindery and excites special interest in the visitor. In my endeavor to convey an idea of the extent of this department I cannot do better than quote a paragraph from a letter written by the present chief clerk, Cadet Taylor, to his home paper, Wenona (Ill.) Index, a copy of which he has kindly furnished me, in which he thus describes the bindery.
