—The Sleepy Hollows were defeated by the Farnam Street nine Monday—score, 14 to 10. The game was hotly contested until the sixth inning, when heavy hitting by the Frrnam Streets decided the result. In the ninth inning the Sleepies scored six runs after two men were declared out.

Recently revised and enlarged. Every recipe has been tested. Reliable, economical and practical. Large profits to live agents.

—There is one chamber scene among the new scenery at Boyd's Opera House, in which a pair of handsome steel engravings are represented as hanging on the wall, and the painting is so skillfully done that a party of gentlemen visiting the opera house last night got up a bet as to whether they were real or painted. One of the gentlemen, a prominent musician of this city, would not be satisfied that they were not either real or wood-cuts pasted in frames until he had gone on the stage, mounted a step-ladder and felt of the canvas himself.

REFORMING THE ARMY.

A Lively Letter from Gen. Howard to the Commandant at Fort Omaha.

Urging the Formation of Red Ribbon Clubs Among the Soldiers.

A Disgusted Officer on the Situation.

"It makes me sick," remarked an officer from Fort Omaha, last evening, as he leaned against the porch of the Paxton House and picked his teeth with a quill, "and you can depend upon it that I am not the only officer in the Department of the Platte that has been troubled recently with chronic nausea."

"What's up?" asked a reporter of the BEE, as the expression of disgust on the officer's face faded away into a look of settled melancholy. "Anything wrong with the commissary pickles, or has the supply of fresh beef given out?"

"Its that d——d temperance business that's knocking me," responded the officer, who poured the following tale of woe into the ear of the sympathizing newspaper man:

"Since its change of commanders, this department has been undergoing a succession of petty and uncalled for annoyances caused by officious and official meddling with the personal habits and preferences of the officers to which no other department is called upon to submit. First we had the order prohibiting the ironing of military convicts, the very natural consequence being the escape of twelve prisoners last month, when the order was revoked. Then came an order from the commanding general forbidding dress parades on Sunday. General Sherman sat down on that with a heavy thud. Following this came a personal inquiry into the religious predelections of the officers, something which is entirely our own business; then a prohibition of all work by the staff on Sunday and to cap the climax comes a letter to General Carlin at Fort Omaha ordering us to organize temperance societies among the soldiers, to stop all drinking among the enlisted men to preserve their spotless morals from city contamination, accompanied with a significant hint that if we fail the regiment will be ordered to frontier service."

"So General Howard wants you to organize temperance societies does he?"

"Wants us to? Confound it he virtually orders Carlin to do it under pain of incurring his displeasure. It beats h—l. Why man, I've served twenty years in the army under a score of commanders and I never in my life have been made so sick at my stomach as I have been during the past year. One would think the department of the Platte was an immense boy's boarding school and it's commander head master."

"What was the form of the latest moral manifesto," queried the interested reporter and what called it forth?"

"We have a sissy of an inspector general who considers his chief duty is to discover whether the habits of officers and men comes up to the Congregational church standard, and who busies himself in finding out what officers take an occasional drink, play whist or decline to attend regularly the ministrations of the chaplain. These are consistently reported to General Howard, who has appointed himself missionary in chief to the army for the sake of obtaining a little cheap notoriety which will prove very costly to him some day. Some days ago the General sent a letter to Colonel Carlin complaining of the amount of drinking at the post, especially among enlisted men and ordering him to have it stopped. He expressed the hope that the officers would set a wholesome example to the men and desired that they should proceed to organize red ribbon clubs among the companies. He said that the great prevalence of intoxication among the enlisted men at the post had been brought to his attention and that it must be stopped or the regiment would be removed to a purer atmosphere."

"Well, why don't you stop it?"

"Stop it? With six saloons within a stones throw of the principal gate of the post and a city of 50,000 inhabitants four miles distant? You might as well attempt to stop the wind from blowing or the clouds from moving. It's infernal buncombe. We discipline severely men who become intoxicated, but that's all we can do. General Howard was raised in Maine and so was Col. Mason, and they ought to know the value of anti-liquor laws. I believe General Howard is a good man and a brave man, but he is absolutely without tact and has a wonderful faculty of making himself immensely unpopular with every one with whom he comes in contact through his assumption of paternal authority. He can't stick to his official duties like other commanders but has to go nosing around into matters with which he has absolutely no concern. This has been his experience everywhere. When he left West Point, Col. Lasselle refused to shake hands with him, and every officer at the garrison heaved a sigh of relief at his departure. By heaven, we'll all throw up our hats here when he goes, and don't you forget it for an instant. Army officers out in this country hav'nt been used to such old-womanly prigishness, and while we have to grin and bear it, comments on the present administration would fill several volumes. Having got temperance societies, a Sunday law, a series of headquarters sermons and a censorship of army morals, all we need now is two missionary societies, a young people's prayer meeting and a contribution box to start a branch of the Salvation Army."

"It makes me sick at the stomach!"

With this parting remark, two shoulder-straps and a pair of black-striped breeches disappeared in the hotel and were lost to view.

PROSPECT HILL CEMETERY.

Improvements Being Made in This Silent City.

A beautiful monument has just been erected upon the lot of S. S. Caldwell, in Prospect Hill cemetery that in style and design equals the finest monuments in any of our eastern cemeteries, and in workmanship and finish is not surpassed anywhere.

The first is base eight feet two inches by six feet two inches and eighteen inches thick, weighing 14,000 pounds. Ten horses were unable to move it from the foot of the hill leading to the cemetery and a house moving apparatus was resorted to. This base is surmounted by another base, embellished with rich, heavy members or mouldings, upon the face of which is cut in raised six-inch letters the family name. The die piece rests upon this, upon which are cut four columns and Corinthian capitals. The columns are polished and the faces of the die are polished and traced ornamentally.

A roof or cap piece, covered with fine carved members, finishes this massive structure, and the whole blends in perfect harmony, symmetry and fine proportions. It is really a masterpiece in workmanship and by far the finest monument we have seen west of Chicago. It is of Westerly, Rhode Island, granite, was designed and furnished by Joseph Pajeau, of Chicago, and is said to have cost $6,000.

This same gentleman has contracted with and is putting up for Hon. G. W. Doane and C. A. Baldwin, in this cemetery, and F. C. Morgan, in the Catholic cemetery, some beautiful monuments, that in design and costliness show that the improvements being made in Omaha this summer are fully equaled in these "silent cities" adjoining it. There is one thing that should receive immediate attention, and that is the street and drive to Prospect Hill cemetery, now sadly neglected, and barely passable. We are informed that the Water company intends laying a main on to the hill. This is an improvement also much needed, and should not be delayed.

A LIVELY RACKET.

The Vicissitudes of the Police Officers.

An Ugly Drunk and His Cranky Conduct.

About 8 o'clock last evening a man named George Emory was arrested for intoxication at the corner of Douglas and Tenth streets, by Officer Lane.

The prisoner went peacefully enough as far as Thirteenth street, where Officer McEnery came to Lane's assistance. By this time the fellow became obstreperous, and the nippers had to be put on him.

When the officers reached the Paxton house with their man, he was howling like a maniac, and a number of guests ran out, and seeing the man being dragged to jail, as they thought, in a cruel manner, they turned in and abused the officers for doing their duty. Captain O'Donohoe and Officer Wittymack now came up and another pair of nippers were put on the fellow, who was carried to the jail, yelling, cursing and blaspheming.

At the head of the stair steps leading down to the jail a man named Went obstructed the passage and denied the right of the officers to commit the prisoner Officer Hinchey proceeded to run Mr. Went in as well as Emory, but he was subsequently bailed out.

An immense crowd had followed the officers to the doors of the lock-up, and was with difficulty dispersed. The belligerent prisoner remained in a cell over night, and will get his reward when Judge Anderson sits this morning.

The interference of the Paxton house guests was entirely uncalled-for and created no little trouble. If policemen have any rights which the public is bound to respect, they should be let alone in the discharge of their duties, and we believe there is not a man on the force at present who would be unnecessarily severe in his treatment of prisoners.

Many times you want to keep meat or fish for several days. Lay it in a solution of Rex Magnus over night, and you can keep it for weeks. You can also keep milk a week or more by stirring in a little of the "Snow Flake" brand.

OPENING THE SCHOOLS.

One-Fifth of the Teaching Force to Be Made Up Anew.

The Board of Education Provides for the Supplies of Wood and Coal.

Superintendent James was found in his office yesterday morning by a collector of diurnal information for THE BEE, and was asked if everything was in shape for the opening of the public schools of Omaha on the 3rd of September.

"Everything," said Mr. James, "appears to be ready. The building have been renovated and the central building and Cass street school house repainted. We are somewhat disappointed, however, in our teachers, many of whom have left for various reasons, to marry, to farm and so on. I should say fully one-fourth of our force would have to be made up anew, and the places are already supplied. We have hundreds of applications, and of those I selected what I considered the best. They came, some from the east, some from Omaha. From Davenport we have

who will be an assistant in High school work. He is a graduate of Hobart college and a bright young man. He taught in Davenport last year The general force of teachers is very good and we expect to accomplish good work."

At a meeting of the board of education last night bids for supplies were received.

Those relating to printing were referred to the committee on rules, forms and printing; those on stationary to the committee on supplies. The contract for hard wood was let to Chas. Childs, who bid $7.00 a cord; the soft wood to Wilson at $5.40. Geo. Patterson received the contract for hard coal at $10.09 a ton.

The application of Mrs. Geo. M. Boyden to be assistant teacher was refused. The application of the Swedish Lutheran church for the use of the school house on Cuming and Saunders street for religious services on Sunday, was refused. The architect's estimate of $23,080 for work done on the new school house, corner Seventeenth and Leavenworth street was allowed contractor F. S. Potvin and a special committee appointed to see Lyman Richardson about purchasing the 40 feet adjoining this property.

IS IT TRUE?

Story of the Erring Ways of a Girl From Omaha.

As Told by a Sensational Writer on An Iowa Paper.

The following lively account of the doings of the supposed daughter of an Omaha banker is found in a Cedar Rapids paper. Our city marshal says he knows nothing about the girl, except that she is not wanted here by the police:

About ten days ago two young girls came to this city and took rooms at one of the city hotels. Arriving here in the night, they were cared for by the night clerk, who showed them to their rooms and attended to their wants. There was nothing in their appearance or actions to give any one cause to suspect their character.

One of these girls was about 18 years of age, and said that she came from Des Moines. The "little one," as the boys alluded to her, is 16 years of age, light complexion, a beautiful girl and very captivating in her manner. The story the "little one" told to one who interested himself in her, was a very peculiar one, and one not without its sad phase. She gave her name as Lizzie Haines, and said that her home was in Omaha. Her own father died while she was very young and her mother married a second time to a banker in that city.

Since the mother's marriage her home relations had not been pleasant. She stated that her step-father had ill treated her and had persisted in the opinion that the girl's virtue was questionable. The mother took up her daughter's side until it became useless to argue against the step-father and the girl, in a fit of despondency and grief, obtained possession of a diamond ring which was the property of her own father, and which her mother had in keeping. This she sold for $250 and she then went to Des Moines. At Des Moines she fell in with her companion and the two took lodging at the Aborn house, where they remained until the "little girl" became aware that an Omaha detective was on her path and had followed her there. From Des Moines they went to Burlington, and thence to this city, arriving here a week ago Thursday. The party to whom she told this story was moved to endeavor to learn more of her history. The story was such an one as an evil woman might have devised to invite sympathy from one less susceptible than the man to whom the "little girl" told it, and he himself doubted it. The conversation took place in her room at the hotel, and when he remarked that he questioned her statements she went to her trunk and took therefrom three letters from her mother, one of which had been forwarded to her from Des Moines three days before she left there. These were notable for the expressions of sorrow and disappointment which the mother entertained for her conduct, and in each of these she pleaded with her wayward daughter to return to Omaha. In one she wrote if the girl would advise her of her whereabouts she would send her money to pay her expenses home, and pledged her that on her return no questions would be asked and nothing done in the matter. As the girl showed these letters tears came in her eyes and she cried piteously. Still she refused to talk about going home and showed an obstinacy that was evidence of her pride. While talking about what she had done, she remarked that the ring which she sold to pay her expenses with, belonged to her dead father, and at this she cried still more. She is yet a young girl, and her appearance did not suggest that of one who had been through the experience of an evil woman.

She remained at the hotel with her companion a few days after this, and subsequently found lodgings elsewhere, and is still here. Yesterday a Republican reporter obtained the information that since the two girls arrived here the older one received a telegram from Des Moines demanding her to go home, and she left.

A detective of this city wrote to the Omaha authorities regarding the Haines girl, and they in return opened correspondence with the Cedar Rapids authorities. Marshal Francis received an answer to his letter to the Omaha marshal, that the girl's mother was very anxious about her, and was desirous that the girl be returned to Omaha. The letter stated that the girl had been a source of great annoyance to her parents, and that if she should return they would not be able to do anything with her.

There is another chapter in this story which is familiar to the police, and it is likely the girl will be taken to Omaha tomorrow.

A MASHER.

Who Made the Window Panes in the Door Suffer Badly.

A big burley fellow last evening created a lively excitement on Dodge street by hurling three big rocks through the glass window panes in the door of a residence occupied by Minnie Fairchilds. The man was arrested and run in and the rocks were also taken up and placed on exhibition in the jailor's office.
