In her note she failed to the name of the nearer and dearer one yet, but this man's disappearance, and the relations between them, make him quite confident that it is her. The deserted husband got all the traces he could of the runaway wife, and being confident that she had come here, he came here also, but had not up to last night been able to find her. Mr. Hyde seems to have his full share of domestic trouble, this being his second wife, he and the first one having seperated for some reason. He says the second wife sets up as one reason for not living with him happily that he never got a divorce from his first wife, but this he denies, of course, and insists that the first tie was
