Time is Money.

Providence Journal There lives in Pawtucket a man whose whole existence seems to be conducted similar to a piece of machinery. His movements and transactions are always "on time." In fact, his great hobby is time. "Be on time and save ime" is his motto. At the same hour every morning he gets out of bed. A few sec-onds later his right boot is on, and then his left; breakfast is finished in a separate time, and he is seen at his place of business just at the stroke of 7. He is constantly enlarging on the immense quantity of time that is wasted and quantity of time that is wasted and thrown away by every man and woman every hour. He illustrated his hobby the other day in a rather amusing and indisputable manner. A friend presented him with a very fine looking cat. Calling the next day, he found the cat without any tail, the tail being cut off as close to the body as could be without entiting the tail off behind the

be without cutting the tail off behind the cat's ears. When asked why he had done this, he remarked: "I have to let this cat in and out of this store a good many times a day. Now, if that eat had a long tail, don't you see, I would have to lose so much time waiting for the tail to go out and in, whereas now I have on y to wait for the cat. A tail is of no earthly use to a cat, and especially to this cat, so you will see I have the cat just the same, and only the time in letting the cat in and out, thus saving all that time that would be lost in letting the tail in and out."

And then, just as a sob was welling up from his vest, he felt a pair of soft, warm arms twined lovingly around his neck, and close beside his own there was pressed a clear-cut cameo face that seemed in its spirituelle beauty like a vision from another world. There were tears in the violet eyes that looked into his so pleadingly, and the curves of the drooping mouth were tense with the agony of an all-powerfulsorrow. Foraninstant neither spoke, and Gwendolen was the first to break the silence. "You must have known, Harold," she said, in tones that were hoarse with agony, "that for months my heart has been in your keeping, and you must also have known that my love is no ephemeral passion—no let-me-take-your-slate-pencil-and - you-can-chew-my-gum - at-recess affection that is here to-day, and to-mor-

An order to understand the timeliness of Luther's birth we must look briefly at the state of the nations just before he appeared. The German Empire was a confederation of the several States with an emperor at their head. There was an outward peace, but an inward turmoil. Men were talking of liberty, and tho yearnings they had for temporal freedom laid them open to the reception of ideas of reformation. Germany was situated in the midst of Christian nation McKenney Miss M Miles Miss M able to efface them." This dream of the Christian martyr was literally fulfilled. Impressions of Christ and his work have been made upon socie-ty, the church and the world that no amount of hostile criticism or unbelieving spite will ever be able to efface. Martin Luther was the instrument in God's hands of retouching the face of the Messiah, lifted in heavenly beauty above the places of humanity's struggles and prayers. In order to understand the timeliness M
